Monroney And Thomas Face Runoff In Oklahoma

Challenger Leads Veteran Senator By 14,095 Votes In Close Primary

Oklahoma City, July 5 (AP).—Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) trailed Representative Mike Monroney for reelection today and faced the first runoff in his political career as he bid for a fifth United States Senate term.

Monroney, Fifth District Congressman for six times, held a 14,095-vote lead over Thomas, with only 102 of the State's 3786 precincts unreported.

Returns from 3595 precincts gave Monroney 201,338 votes to 187,243 for Thomas.

Both candidates immediately pledged a hard campaign for the July 25 run-off. The second election is necessary because the other five Democratic candidates drew sufficient votes to keep Monroney away from a clear majority.

Johnston Murray rolled up the most primary votes in State history in seeking the Democratic nomination for Governor. Murray, son of colorful former Gov. William H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray, faced a run-off, but will have a comfortable lead of around 83,000 votes.

Congressmen Run Ahead

With votes counted in 3733 precincts, Murray had 233,223 to 138,520 for William O. Cot, Oklahoma City attorney, his nearest foe.

All State Congressmen held comfortable leads.

The Senate race monopolized interest as the lead swayed back and forth throughout the day. Thomas, veteran of 28 years in Congress, at one time dropped 11,000 votes behind, but nearly closed the gap as more urban boxes reported.

Public power, farm price supports and each others' records will continue to be principal issues in the second try as they were in the first primary.

Monroney accuses Thomas of blocking public power projects and Thomas charges that Monroney voted for low parities. Each has denied the campaign accusations.

The Rev. Bill Alexander, pastor-politician, won the Republican Senate nomination by lapping the field in a four-man race. With two-thirds of the precincts reporting, Alexander had 35,054 votes to 12,289 for Raymond H. Fields, Guthrie newspaperman, the second high.

Oklahoma has a light Republican registration to vote in pri-

Russian Embassy Receives Midnight Mystery Shipment

Three large vanloads of materials were unloaded and moved into the Soviet Embassy shortly before midnight last night.

An Embassy spokesman acknowledged the shipment but refused comment on "what was being sent where." But a witness said about 20 men were moving crates into the 16th st. building. One truck was parked behind and two in front.

The trucks bore the name of a Brooklyn, N. Y., moving firm (Slobovski, Utica ave.). This led to a belief the shipment might have come from a Soviet concern there, perhaps the Russian Amtorg Trading Co.

Two Hospitals Blacked Out By Lightning

Power Failures Hit Area During Afternoon Storm

Lightning struck at Gallinger Hospital and at a Pepco substation during yesterday's storm starting at 4:30 p. m., and blacked out Arlington Hospital as hundreds of power failures and general flooded conditions were reported throughout Greater Washington.

At Gallinger, lights were out from 5 p. m. to 6:30 p. m., but Paul Keen, deputy superintendent, said there was no fright among the patients. Principally affected were the plant's refrigeration and air conditioning.

No operations were in progress, Keen said, and an auxiliary power system was available in case of emergency surgery. Keen said a couple of elevators stopped between floors, but passengers and operators escaped through the roofs. Flashlights and candles were used at key points until lights were restored.

The lightning struck an arrester on a transformer near the isolation building, Keen said.

The Pepco substation at Bailey and G sts. se. also was struck, setting off three fires in the area, and cutting off lights generally. The District Fire Department answered calls to the substation, to 812 44th st. ne., 4921 Minnesota ave. ne., and 516 44th st. ne. Firemen said wires leading from the station had been ignited.

At Arlington Hospital, lights were out from 5 p. m. to 6:15 p. m. Hospital officials switched to their emergency power system for operating and X-ray rooms. No operations were in progress.

The storm brought announcement of cancellation of the Watergate concert, which will be heard tonight at 8:30 p. m. Scheduled had been an all-Tschaikovsky program by the National Symphony Orchestra, with cannon booming out the finale of the "1812" overture. The cancellation

Senate Votes $119 Million D. C. Budget

Cut to $6 Million By House Expected To Be Restored in Conference on Bill

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

Without making a single change, the Senate yesterday approved a record $119,019,562 District budget for the current fiscal year which began Saturday.

The city is now functioning under a continuing resolution permitting the District to draw funds from the Treasury until this regular supply bill is signed into law.

Yesterday's action sent the city's spending program to conference with the House, which in May voted a $6,179,222 lower figure.

While there will be agreement on a final compromise total, the House is expected to go along with some of the larger Senate-approved increases.

Expected Increases

These boosts probably will include $2,041,800 to start the East Capitol st. bridge, $1,928,000 additional to speed expansion of the city water system, and perhaps some extra funds for sewer construction and paying private hospitals for care of indigent patients.

The District supply bill sailed through the Senate in about 45 minutes, with debate concentrated on these two points:

Suggestions from the Republican side that the 12 million dollars Federal payment to the District be reduced, since the Senate-approved spending bill may leave the city with more than a four million dollar surplus next July 1.

Demands by Senator Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Nebr.) that the Metropolitan Police vice squad chief hold the rank of inspector.

Status of Blick

Lieut. Roy E. Blick now heads the vice squad, with rank of lieutenant. Blick is the officer who two months ago supplied the information on which Wherry based his successful demand for a full-scale investigation of alleged sex perverts on Government payrolls.

Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.) opened debate on possible reduction of the Federal payment. The House already has voted to trim the $11,000,000 general fund payment to $9,800,000.

Saltonstall suggested the Federal outlay should be shaved this year, since the District has a prospective surplus while the Federal Government faces a huge deficit.

Holiday Accidents Set New Record With 793 Dead

The long, slam-bang Fourth of July celebration was the bloodiest holiday period in the Nation's peacetime history.

It brought sudden and violent death to at least 793 persons

The president of the National Safety Council, Ned H. Dearborn, said it makes America's part in the Korean war during the same period "look like a Sunday School picnic."

The previous high holiday accident fatality record of 761 was set during the three-day Christmas weekend in 1936.

15 Call Moving Firm

Area Householders Act to Get Rid of Icebox Death Traps

Steps were taken yesterday to remove more than 15 potential "death-traps" for children from the back yards and porches of Washington Area homes.

Such precautions could have saved the lives of three young boys who locked themselves in an abandoned icebox in Fairfax County last month and were suffocated.

Listing in The Washington Post of agencies which would remove iceboxes brought immediate results.

Smith's Transfer & Storage Co., 1313 U st. nw., had received about 15 requests for removal of old iceboxes since Friday. As a public service, the moving firm offered to pick up at no charge abandoned iceboxes of residents whose communities did not provide this service.

Some of the requests received by Smith's were from District residents and will be referred to the District Division of Sanitation which includes the pickup of iceboxes and other bulky objects as part of its regular trash collection service.

The division's office was closed for the four-day holiday weekend so could not receive calls.

However, William Xanten, superintendent of the division, has stated that useless iceboxes will be picked up in the trash collection if householders telephone National 6000, extension 584 or 585.

The Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, which is responsible for trash collections in the suburban section of Montgomery County, said it had received calls to pick up "one or two"

Propaganda Drive of Reds Alarms U. S.

'Ike' and Marshall Ask Counteraction; 'Terrifying,' Says Benton at Hearing

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Military and civilian leaders expressed anger and alarm yesterday at the apparent spread of the Soviet fable that the United States started the Korean war.

According to the Soviet version, blaring day and night from Communist transmitters, the South Koreans launched the attack on an American signal from Tokyo, and the United States then used the United Nations illegally to back up its "aggression."

Gen. George C. Marshall told a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee yesterday that this propaganda drive was "a most determined attack being carried on in a most skillful manner," and called for "dynamic" measures to defeat it.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, describing truth as "our T-bomb," said the American and U. N. action in Korea had been "so twisted before the world by a shrewd propaganda campaign that it has been made to look vicious."

"Terrifying," Benton Says

Senator William Benton (D., Conn.), formerly assistant secretary in charge of the State Department's information work, said the success of the Soviet propaganda drive had been "terrifying." And John Foster Dulles, just back from Korea, warned that if the Russians could get their version believed around the world they would be in a position to launch open war.

Dulles predicted that "war or peace in the next few months" would depend on the success or failure of the Soviet propaganda campaign over Korea.

"If the Russians think they can move from cold war to hot war and still have the world look upon them as peace-loving," said Dulles, "then they will move. But if the world sees this Korean attack for what it is, then I think they won't strike."

All these witnesses testified yesterday in whole-hearted support of Benton's resolution, backed by 13 Senators of both parties, calling for "a Marshall Plan in the field of ideas" through greatly expanded American information and propaganda throughout the world.

The State Department, on President Truman's instructions, has already drawn up plans for what Secretary Acheson described yesterdaw as "a great campaign of truth." But these plans are still

Units Needed To Meet Plea By M'Arthur

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Call up of some 40 Organized Reserve battalions is being weighed by Defense chiefs as the first step in expanding the Army to meet the new emergency.

Officials said activation of these special combat and service units is under serious consideration and would come ahead of any call of the National Guard or use of the draft. Officers and men probably would be brought in on a voluntary basis, it was said.

General MacArthur, it is understood, has made a number of pleas for additional forces and has warned Washington he can't clean up the Korean campaign on a shoe-string. Because of international political considerations, however, top Administration chiefs are reluctant to order any sort of a mobilization, such as would be involved in a general compulsory call of the Guard and Reserves. The voluntary activities of the Reserve special units, however, is almost certain to be approved, one source said.

Meanwhile, the Air Force disclosed that it is sending a number of North American F-51 Mustang

Bishop O'Hara, Aides Ousted By Romania

Papal Nuncio, Staff, Accused of 'Spying,' Get 3 Days to Leave

London, July 5 (AP).—Romania announced today she has ordered American Bishop Gerald P. O'Hara, last Vatican diplomat in an Iron Curtain country, and his two chief aides to leave in three days.

The Soviet satellite charged that the Nunciature, the Vatican's diplomatic mission, was a center of "Anglo-American espionage" against Romania, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

At the Vatican, a Romanian source said a week ago Romanian authorities had been trying to get rid of the bishop for months and the outbreak in Korea "probably persuaded the regime to make an end of his case."

The Romanian news agency broadcast that the Romanian foreign office told Bishop O'Hara yesterday he must quit the country by Friday. Ousted with him were Msgr. Delmester de Chonbert, the Italian auditor, and Msgr. John Kirk, the American secretary of the Nunciature. Both Bishop O'Hara and Monsignor Kirk are from the diocese of Savannah-Atlanta, Ga.

And Mitchell Gets Black Face

Tschaikowsky Wanted Cannon, Watergate Concert Gets Four

By Paul Hume
Post Reporter

"Tschaikowsky said 'cannon' and we're going to give them cannon," Howard Mitchell said last week as he finished his first "shooting" rehearsal for the 1812 Overture.

"After he had put everything else into the music he could think of, and still wanted more sound—more noise—then Tschaikowsky added cannon." This was Mitchell on why the big guns were fired last night at the conclusion of the Watergate Concert, a program of music all by the popular Russian composer. The program was postponed last night as a result of the thunderstorm.

You have heard of people getting red in the face. Well, last week Mitchell got black in the face. It was the first time he had stood next to a 75mm howitzer when an artillery gunner fired the thing. The National Symphony conductor wanted to know just how it worked. So he said to the gunner from Fort Myer:

"It's sort of like a bump in burlesque routine. The rhythm goes 'boom-ta-tee-ya-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-dum-dum and BOOM'—and when it goes 'boom' you fire the thing. Now tell me," Mitchell asked, "how fast will it go off when you want it to?"

"That's easy," said the gunner. "You give me the 'boom' again, and I'll show you." So Mitchell is standing about two feet from the gun, and he goes "boom" and the gunner fires the howitzer and the "boom" knocks Mitchell a couple of feet, but not quite off the ground.

Black with smoke, but happy with his new toy, the conductor comes back and says "Let's try it again, I want to make sure everything is set right." So they run through it again. This time it does not knock Mitchell quite so far, but the smoke and powder do just as much work on him as before.

Now Mitchell is satisfied. But just to make sure, he has stationed two musicians by the guns. There were two guns south of the spectators' seats, and two at the north. Fritz Maile, personnel director of the orchestra and one of its violinists, took the south end, and Emerson Meyers, music director of the Sesquicentennial, and a member of the symphony board, and a pianist-composer, went with the north guns.

Meyers spent 18 months in the infantry in Europe during the war and heard bigger guns than 75's. "Heck," he said after dress rehearsal yesterday morning, "they didn't make so much noise after all."

Other orchestras have used various doubles for the guns. The big bass drum can do the job, though not the way the composer wanted it. Sousa used to use big cannoncrackers with his band.

Out in Chicago they used to do it in Soldiers' Field, with artillery brought down from Fort Sheridan.

It is the only piece in the regular repertoire of orchestras that calls for cannon. And tonight, thanks to the orchestra and Fort Myer, "they'll get cannon."

3 Red Cities Struck Hard By Bombers

Land Planes Follow Carrier Raids, Hit Capital, Its Port, Supply Route Town

Tokyo, July 5 (AP).—American land-based planes today inflicted "heavy damage" to the North Korean capital of Pyongyang, its port of Chinnampo, and at Haeju just above the Thirty-eighth Parallel on the supply route to the south. A MacArthur headquarters communique at midnight announced the actions.

Northern targets were still rocking from two days of bombing and strafing from American and British carrier planes. It was their first attack in the Korean war.

Today the Air Force bombers made 16 sorties just below the north-south border at railway tracks northwest of Hunan. Good results were reported.

Fighters made 158 sorties, reporting a 12-car train set on fire, a locomotive damaged, and tracks and bridges rocketed and strafed, the communique said. While it reported the Northerners were still getting troops and material across the Han River, indicating "preparation for further aggressive action," it said the United States Army "continued to move supplies and munitions and personnel by air and sea from Japan to Korea."

North's Air Base Damaged

The first carrier planes in the Korean war came from the United States carrier Valley Forge and the British carrier H. M. S. Triumph. Monday and Tuesday they hurled fierce attacks at Pyongyang and heavily damaged its airfield, reported to be the base for most of the North's air operations.

They bombed and machine-gunned a river bridge nearby, then struck at Sariwon, 40 miles south of Pyongyang. Jet fighters destroyed 12 locomotives.

Navy fliers strafed and rocket-bombed a troop train. Fires were set at Chinnampo. Rolling stock and rail yards at Pyongyang suffered "moderate to heavy damage." Two gunboats were strafed on the Taedong River, which flows from Pyongyang to Chinnampo.

Two Russian-model Yak fighters were shot down Monday, the communique said, and six Yaks

Knife on Finger, Doctor Removes Scar in Heart

A delicate operation on a heart valve to cut away scar tissue obstructing the flow of blood was performed for the first time in Washington last Saturday, it was reported yesterday.

Dr. Brian Blades, professor of surgery at George Washington University School of Medicine and chief of surgery at the university hospital, inserted a knife attached to his forefinger through the patient's upper heart chamber. He then opened the valve and cut the scar.

The patient, a 31-year-old woman, is convalescing at the hospital. Rheumatic fever had scarred the valve, preventing normal flow of blood through the heart. Without treatment, the flow eventually would have stopped.

Fires Numerous Shots First

Young Husband Shoots Wife After Beating Her With Gun

A jealous husband went on a shooting spree last night and shot his wife in the leg during a hectic series of events, according to police.

The husband, Archie T. Vann, 20, of 2626 Garfield st. nw., was held at the 13th Precinct stationhouse on two counts of assault with a deadly weapon.

Briefly, according to the police report, this is what happened:

1—Vann fired at the man who was in an apartment with his wife. Shot at her. Dragged her out to his car. Fired again into the air.

2—Drove to Sheridan Circle and ran out of gas. Forced a cab driver at gunpoint to take him and his wife as passengers. Bought two gallons of gasoline.

3—Beat his wife over the head with the gun butt. Shot her in the leg. Put her back in his car. Drove off to Rock Creek Park.

The wife, Mrs. Grace Vann, 21, was reported in satisfactory condition at Emergency Hospital.

Police said Vann, a counterman at a restaurant at 18th st. and Columbia rd. nw., went to an apartment at 1824 New Hampshire ave. nw., searching for his wife who had been absent from their home Tuesday night. This was at about 6:30 p. m.

In the apartment with Mrs. Vann, according to police, was Homer Wise, 33.

This is the police version of what followed:

Vann, waving a .25-caliber automatic of German make, fired two shots over Wise's head.

Senate Group Cuts Point 4 By 15 Millions

Action Regarded As Devastating Blow To Truman Program

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The Point Four program for giving technical aid to underdeveloped areas of the world suffered a devastating defeat yesterday at the hands of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

That body, it was learned, cut the recommended funds for President Truman's "bold new" program to 10 million dollars. Initially, the Administration had asked for 45 million dollars and in authorization legislation, Congress set the figure at 35 million dollars.

The cut is actually only about 15 million dollars rather than 25 million dollars, below the authorized amount. For, in addition to the 10 million dollars for Point Four, there was sanctioned an amount of about the same size for current programs under the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, for technical aid to Latin America, and for the cultural relations program under the Smith-Mundt Act.

Even so, the reduction is a smashing one, both in amount and in its probable psychological effect. Contingent on appropriations action, the United States had pledged 12 million dollars for technical aid programs to the United Nations. On this basis, other U. N. members pledged another eight million dollars.

If the U. S. passes on the total 10 million dollars to the U. N., it will have no money for Point Four work directly under U. S. auspices. The American Point Four program, as distinct from a U. N. scheme, will simply not come into being, except for such technical help as is now being conducted in Latin America.

If, on the other hand, the U. S. chooses to withhold some of the money to be appropriated for a technical aid program of its own, the lesser amount going to U. N. may provoke a chain reaction.

Foe's Armor Endangering GIs' Newest Positions

Most of Americans Escaped, Is Belief; 40 Northern Tanks Are Continuing Drive

Tokyo (Thursday), July 6 (AP).—North Korean armor yesterday broke through South Korean defenses south of Suwon as the Far East war developments continued to go against the defenders.

An American advance element was cut off but there were indications most of its men had been able to pull back to new lines.

Associated Press Correspondent Tom Lambert, at one time feared captured by the North Koreans, got out of the battle zone and reported from Taejon that 40-Russian-made North Korean tanks overran the American outpost, forcing an American withdrawal and leaving behind an unknown number of wounded. Lambert quoted reliable sources that the Americans had knocked out seven tanks but the Reds were continuing the drive southward. Red infantry followed the Red tanks.

(The United Press reported the Korean Communist radio had said that United Press Staff Correspondent Peter Kalischer had been captured on the Suwon front.)

The Americans suffered casualties in the battle that preceded the break-through but Lambert said they were believed moderate.

Lambert also reported that the positions to which the Americans withdrew are now believed threatened by the fast-moving Reds.

(In Taejon, South Korea's defense minister said the tank column south of Suwon has been halted. He did not give any sources.

Sign Sung Mo, who also is the republic's acting Premier, said, "I am confident we will hold. The appearance of confusion yesterday is because many of our men were forced out of Seoul without arms or sufficient ammunition and now they are being regrouped, reorganized and moved back into the lines.")

Artillery Fires Point-Blank

Lambert said that at one time during the break-through fight American artillerymen fired point blank at the Red tanks, sighting down the gun barrels, so close was the fighting. They later immobilized their guns and withdrew when Red armor overran the positions.

The fight preceding the break-through began at 8 a. m. yesterday

Surprise by Reds In Far East Seen Within a Month

Hong Kong, July 5 (AP).—Diplomatic observers today predicted Soviet Russia is setting the stage for a surprise move against the United States in the Far East.

They said the Russians, probably would rush Chinese Communist troops from Manchuria to aid Soviet- supported North Korea in the Korean civil war.

Such a move "can be expected any time within the next month, and probably within two weeks," they added. All demanded anonymity.

One observer gave this reason for forecasting a Soviet offensive in the Far East:

His country (and he declined use of his nationality as well as his name for diplomatic reasons) has "definite word" that the Chinese Reds have been massing troops in Manchuria since they captured Hainan Island, off the south China coast, a month ago.

For three days, independent Chinese newspapers here have reported intensified Communist troop movements northward from South China. The informant's word today is the first official word that this redeployment of Chinese Red forces actually has been going on for some time, and with a definite pattern.

U. S. Survey Mission To Check Asia Arms

By The Associated Press

The Defense Department said yesterday a survey mission is going to Southeast Asia to check up on the military needs of Communist-menaced countries in that area.

The group, made up largely of military and State Department officials, will leave Friday by air.

Members of the mission will confer with American and foreign officials in Indo-China, Indonesia, Malaya, Burma, Thailand and the Philippines.

The department said the mission "will survey the nature and extent" of American assistance required under the arms aid program. It will also check on priorities for military assistance and the character of United States military advisory groups needed in the area.

The State Department representatives on the mission will be headed by John F. Melby, special assistant to the Assistant Secretary for Far Eastern Affairs.

Maj. Gen. Graves B. Erskine, commander of the First Marine Division at Camp Pendleton, Cal., will be chief of the military group.

Glenn H. Craig, deputy director of the Economic Cooperation Administration industry division, will represent ECA.

At a midmorning briefing session, Navy officials told newsmen yesterday that no submarines had been observed thus far in the Korean zone.

A study of reports from the sea front indicated to military men here that the carrier strikes against North Korean targets were being conducted from the Yellow Sea, instead of the Sea of Japan or the straits to the south.

Briefing officers pointed out that the waters east of Korea are restricted and would make carrier operations hazardous. On the other hand, the big Yellow Sea offers ample maneuver room. Also targets being hit by naval planes are on the west side of Korea.

Eden Recalls:

Stalin Said He Could Tell When to Stop

London, July 5 (U.P.)—Soviet Premier Josef Stalin once assured Anthony Eden that, unlike Adolf Hitler, he knew when to stop, Eden said tonight.

"I remember a conversation I had with Marshal Stalin at a very grim period of the war in December, 1941," Eden told Parliament. At that time Eden was British Foreign Secretary.

"We were discussing Hitler's character, and Stalin made this comment: 'We should not underrate Hitler. He is a very able man. But he made one mistake. He did not know when to stop.'

"I suppose I smiled," said Eden. "At any rate Marshal Stalin turned to me and observed, 'you are smiling. I know why. You think that if we are victorious, I shall not know when to stop. You are wrong. I shall know.'

"Tonight, I am wondering," Eden observed, "whether the time has not come when he might recall those words and consider that the time has come when it would be well to stop."

Nation Already at War, Morse Tells Senators

Senator Wayne L. Morse (R., Oreg.) told the Senate yesterday the United States should "face the fact that we are at war" and "get the economy in shape as fast as possible" for a possible all-out emergency.

The Oregon Republican repeated his demand that the President call both parties together and try to settle the Midwest railroad strike as quickly as possible.

"If we were American troopers in Korea this afternoon, we'd know we are at war," Morse told the Senate, adding that "it doesn't mean much to men who are bleeding this afternoon that this is just a police action or a minor dispute."

'Hitler Acted Himself; Stalin Uses Satellites'

Paris, July 5 (U.P.)—The Catholic newspaper La Croix said today in an article on the Korean war that Adolf Hitler was frank enough to act for himself, while Premier Joseff Stalin "makes the satellite march."

The article, written by Jean Caret, said Christians must increase their prayers, words and acts for peace.

He criticized the "ineffectiveness" of the United Nations and compared it to the League of Nations in 1931 when Japan attacked China.

"When the North attacked the South (in Korea), the United States acted without even waiting for the decision of the United Nations Security Council, jostling the legal procedure of the heavy machinery at Lake Success," Caret wrote.

Army PX Extends Credit to Refugees

Yokohama, Japan, July 5 (U.P.)—The United States Army post exchange here extended credit today of $50 for adults and $25 for children to Korean evacuees who want to buy clothes.

A Red Cross field director said most of the 350 evacuees in Yokohama needed clothes and did not have the money to pay for them.

Bonus for Japanese Seamen in War Zone and two LI-2s were strafed on the ground Tuesday. The Navy planes had no personnel casualties during the two-day strike, the communique added. Two American planes were damaged by anti-aircraft fire but returned to their carrie.

4 Red Planes Destroyed

Earlier, the Air Force had reported seven Red planes damaged and four destroyed.

The naval air strike was directed by Vice Admiral Arthur D. Struble, commander of the U. S. Seventh Fleet, to which the Valley Forge is attached. Vice Admiral Charles T. Joy, commander of naval forces in the Far East, said the raids were "highly successful."

The air strikes came as a larger array of American air power is building up. More B-29s left the United States last night, one group from March Field, Calif., and another from Spokane, Wash. Both are bound for the Far East. Both are manned by many World War II veterans. The strength of neither was disclosed.

The U. S. escort carrier Sicily, its decks loaded with warplanes, sailed from San Diego Tuesday while naval guns boomed a Fourth of July salute. The big carriers Philippine Sea and the Boxer are being readied. They are expected to depart soon.

Equipped for Sub War

The Sicily is specially equipped for anti-submarine warfare. Normally she carries three squadrons with electronic devices to detect undersea craft.

Alerted, ready to move, and scheduled to join MacArthur's command was the Marine air wing based at El Toro, Calif.

In Korea, Air Force officers conferred with South Korean staff officers on using the F-51 American fighters recently turned over to the Koreans.

Koreans filtering in from the northern-captured areas said leaflets dropped by American planes are helping to stop panic and restore hope, said an earliner MacArthur communique. The leaflets say powerful American help is on the way and to hold firm. They are dropped late in the afternoon, so that Southern Koreans who come out of hiding at night may find them before Northern troops have a chance to get them out of sight.

Blasting of Reds', Fuel Reserves Grounds Planes

NYHT News Service

Navy officials here yesterday attributed absence of Communist air activity over Korea in the last two days to destruction of fuel reserves and other vital supplies by American planes. Apparently, they said, the raids had done even greater damage than reported by the pilots.

The raids were carried out by Air Force B-29 Boeing Superfortress bombers and by Navy fighters and dive bombers from the Aircraft Carrier Valley Forge.

North Korea had approximately 150 planes when it launched its invasion of South Korea. Less than a fifth of these were shot down or disabled on the ground.

Defense Heads Cancel Public Talks for July

A White House spokesman announced yesterday that President Truman has "no present intention" of delivering a special address to Congress or a radio report to the nation on the Korean war crisis.

Press Secretary Charles G. Ross held open the possibility that Mr. Truman may take such action eventually. But he said it is "safe to assume" he won't do so this week.

The Chief Executive is expected to have something to say on the trend of events, however, at his weekly news conference this morning.

Meantime, Defense Secretary Louis Johnson revealed after a White House call that top military leaders have adopted a policy of making no speeches at least for the rest of this month.

He said the silent period is intended to prevent any "misinterpretation" of the Korean crisis, and added:

"This is no time to be making speeches anyway. Everybody is too busy."

In answer to questions, Johnson said no moves have been made to remove any ships from the Navy's reserve "mothball" fleet and restore them to sea duty.

Johnson also asserted that his economy program has speeded unification of the armed forces, and put the Nation in a better position to meet the Korean crisis because it now has a military "team that can work together."

British Back Attlee Support Of Korea Move

London, July 5 (U.P.). — Parliament voted unanimous approval of the Labor government's action "in helping to resist the unprovoked aggression against the Republic of Korea" tonight after leaders of all parties warned weakness now would hasten a new world war.

A government-tabled motion indorsing its action in Korea was approved without a division after Prime Minister Clement Attlee warned the Korean conflict "involves grave issues of peace and war" and Conservative Leader Winston Churchill urged the Western world to make a "resolute effort" to come to a settlement with Russia while the United States still has atomic superiority.

Only one voice was heard to shout "aye" when the speaker put a motion by Welsh Laborite Stephen Davies that Britain withdraw her naval forces from Korean waters. The speaker announced it rejected.

Churchill said a policy of drift until Russia has her own stockpile of A-bombs might mean disaster, because Russia already has air and armor superiority in Europe and Asia.

Fears Communist Victory

A Communist victory in Korea might force a third world war, Churchill warned, adding:

"The immunity of western Europe from attack depends overwhelmingly on the vastly superior stockpile of atomic bombs by the United States. There is the deterrent and the sole decisive deterrent which exists, which could be brought into being in the near future."

Churchill recalled that United States Chief of Staff Gen. Omar Bradley recently said the Russians may have enough atom bombs in three or four years to cause a major catastrophe.

"For this reason," Churchill said, "I believe it better that we should make a resolute effort to come to a settlement with them by peaceful means, on the basis of strength, and not weakness, on the basis of success, and not fatuous incapacity for resistance to aggression.

Understands Propaganda

"We should endeavor to come to a settlement with them before they become possessed of this devastating power, in addition to all the air and armor superiority they undoubtedly possess at this time in Europe and Asia.

"I quite understand the Communist propaganda about banning the atomic bomb, because such a decision would leave the civilized world entirely at their mercy, even before they accumulated the necessary stockpile themselves.

"Since this act of aggression in Korea, and the spirited reaction of the United States, I fell we ought to bring the policy of drift to an end. No better prelude to opening major discussions with the Soviet government could be found than the successful repulse of the Communist forces now invading Korea."

Three Labor members of Parliament asked for a meeting of President Truman, Premier Stalin and Attlee to end the Korean fighting. Conservative C. Hopkinson proposed that U.N. forces in South Korea drive into all of North Korea after they succeed in pushing the Communists back to the Thirty-eighth Parallel.

British Gold Reserves Up 438 Millions

London, July 5 (AP).—Sir Stafford Cripps announced today the sterling area's gold and dollar reserves have jumped 438 million dollars in the past three months to $2,422,000,000.

This means the area is now more than 1 billion dollars better off in reserves than it was just before the value of the pound was cut from $4.03 to $2.80 last September 18 to give the area's international trade a shot in the arm.

Britain is the banker of the sterling area, which includes British Commonwealth countries and other states such as Egypt, Burma, Iraq and Iceland.

Cripps, the British chancellor of the exchequer, was plainly pleased as he told the House of Commons of this achievement. But he warned that the British economy is still far from out of the woods. Any critical worsening of international affairs, he said, could still knock it into a cocked hat.

Parachute Champion Gets Three Days Off

Fayetteville, N. C., July 5 (U.P.). The United States Army gave paratroop Sergt. John W. Swetich a three-day pass today to recover from the battering he took jumping out of an airplane 123 times to set a world's record for one day's parachuting.

The tough, 32-year-old veteran of the Eighty-second Airborne Division wasn't even happy as he limped home on a twisted ankle and knee.

Red Tank-Led Forces Trap U. S. Troops . . .

INFANTRY CUT OFF—U. S. troops have been trapped north of Osan (underlined) by North Korean infantry led by tanks. The Reds penetrated to Sojong, south of Osan, continuing the enveloping attack on the Yongdungpo-Inchon-Suwon triangle (shaded). Other Communist columns are reported heading toward Chungju and Inchon. The U. S. Air Force hammered North Korean targets (blast symbols) at Pyongyang, the capital; Sariwon, Haeju and Chinnampo. and the GI infantrymen began running low on ammunition at 3 p. m. At that time survivors were ordered to evacuate. Some Americans had to evacuate through a town in which three parked Red tanks kept them under fire. Others pulled back through a less hazardous route.

Meanwhile at Advance American Headquarters in South Korea it was officially announced that the situation was "a little better this morning than it was last night (south of Suwon) because American reinforcements are being rushed forward. The movement continued all night long."

The same spokesman said South Korean troops had offered only slight resistance to the Reds south of Suwon but had done better on the front near Wongju. Lambert reported that the South Koreans broke and rushed down from the hills, heading south away from the front, during the break-through fight.

40,000 Invaders in Attack

Lambert said they broke before an attack by an estimated 40,000 Red invaders who drove south despite rain and the fire of American artillery.

Overcast skies hampered air support as July 6 dawned over the battlefield.

The formal announcement of the fall of Inchon, Seoul port, finally was made at Advance American Headquarters. Naval facilities were withdrawn first.

Commanding Gen. William F. Dean made a tour of the battle sector this morning.

Advance headquarters said the Americans believe the North Korean tanks are Soviet two-seventies, a nine-ton light tank mounting a 67-milimeter gun among others.

Advance headquarters also speculated that North Koreans might bring 40 to 50 more tanks into the fighting zone but might experience difficulty supplying them with gas and ammunition.

Supply Lines More Extended

Northern supply lines, while they would not seem troublesomely long yet, may prove extended because of the rough terrain and high rivers due to recent rains.

The Korean Red radio at Pyongyang claimed that two American light cruisers had been sunk by North Korean navy units but later revised this downward to one cruiser sunk. U. S. Navy headquarters in Tokyo termed the report "hogwash."

The Pyongyang radio did not specify what naval craft the northerners possessed that was capable of taking on a light cruiser, but the claim caused some observers in the south to recollect recent stories of large Russian submarines in Far Eastern waters.

Weather Hampers Warplanes

Tank-killing squads continued to hunt for the Red armor that cut off the advance American element. The weather kept warplanes from attacking the break-through Red tanks and troops.

The tanks moved down the highway from conquered Suwon, 23 miles south of Seoul, the fallen South Korean capital, to the point of battle and break-through.

The action came near the railway station at Sojong, 18 miles south of Suwon. Sojong appears to be the western anchor of a fluid front that extends on a zigzag course for more than 60 miles to the northeast.

MacArthur's headquarters communique said the frontal attack had forced back the defenders—American and South Korean troops—to high ground north of Osan. Osan is 11 miles south of Suwon and seven miles north of Sojong.

More North Korean men and arms were streaming across the Han river south of Seoul. The northern invaders appeared to be building up for an even stronger push.

The drive was rolling southward on its own power, far from its bomb-battered bases.

The battle south of Seoul was being fought in the mud and in a downpour of rain.

MacArthur's communique indicated concern for the situation on the east flank of the American positions south of Seoul and Suwon.

It said the Northerners were sending columns "around the east flank of the defending forces with the apparent objective of cutting off the avenue of retreat."

Northern forces which had been operating in the vicinity of Yoju, 35 miles east of Suwon, apparently turned west. The communique said they were headed from Yoju to Ichon, a defense position 25 miles east of Suwon.

This force was apparently trying to increase the pressure on the east flank of the American position around Osan.

Chinese Nationalists Assured by Leaders They Won't Submit to Any Red Aggression

Taipei, July 5 (AP).—Chinese Nationalists, alarmed over their government's ban on offensive action against the Chinese Communists, were assured today that it won't submit passively to Red aggression.

The assurance came from Shen Chang-huan, government spokesman, in a written reply to Chinese reporters' questions.

The government banned offensive air and sea operations against the Communists last Wednesday. President Truman made that a condition of his promise that the United States would defend Nationalist China, South Korea and Indo-china against the Reds.

Naturally, Shen wrote, Nationalist naval and air units would support ground forces if the Reds attacked Quemoy or any other islands off the mainland. Shen wrote further:

Liaison work between the Nationalists and the United States Seventh Fleet already has started and is being strengthened.

Talks on the Nationalists' offer of aid to South Korea are proceeding with General MacArthur's headquarters. President Truman has turned down a Nationalist offer to send troops to Korea.

"The purpose of America's emergency measures," Shen said, was to strengthen the defense of Formosa and see this island "safeguarded under the Nationalist government."

He described Formosa as perhaps the most stable and prosperous area in the whole Far East, and said it is the most powerful base against Communist forces.

"It is my deepest conviction that if our people and armed forces continue to fight communism to the very last in order to safeguard our national independence and freedom and if we remain loyal to the United Nations, the United Nations will continue to give us the greatest support," Shen concluded.

District uneasiness his been noticeable in Nationalist circles over the ban on air and sea operations against Red China. Apparently even reconnaissance missions cannot be undertaken by the Nationalist air force.

The Nationalists feel the Reds will take advantage of the situation to mass armadas for the invasion of Formosa. Some quarters think they might undertake the invasion despite the fact the U. S. 7th Fleet is protecting Formosa.

Moscow, so the argument goes, might order the Reds to attack in the hope of provoking a clash between them and the 7th Fleet.

Smuts Still on Gain

Pretoria, South Africa, July 5 (U.P.).—Field Marshal Jan Christian Smuts, who has been ill since late in May, continued to show steady improvement today.

U. S. Blocked 1947 Seizure of Seoul, —Silenced Whistle

New York, July 5 (NYHT).—American officials blocked a Communist attempt to take over the South Korean capital city of Seoul as early as 1947 by simply ordering the fire department not to blow its noon whistle, it was reported today by the city's one-time military mayor.

"A series of Red uprisings and demonstrations had been planned to coincide with the sounding of the whistle," explained Lieut. Col. James E. Wilson, chief executive of the city from 1945 to 1948. "When it failed to blow, gangs of Communist thugs were left standing on street corners all over the city with no signal to start operations."

The Bazooka and the Tank—A Duel in the Korean Rain

By Tom Lambert
Associated Press Staff Writer

An Advanced Command Oupost in South Korea, Thursday, July 6 (AP).—Eight Russian-made North Korean tanks struck American outposts yesterday and at least two broke through a rain of shells and bazooka fire, infiltrated American positions and cut off one forward element.

The action began at 8:18 a. m. Korean time (8:18 p. m. Eastern Standard Time Tuesday), when tanks moving south down the road from Suwon were under fire by United States medium artillery. The Reds had captured Suwon Tuesday.

When the two tanks broke through, advancing toward the American infantry positions, the artillery was forced to withhold further fire.

As night fell, Americans were firing heavy mortars at the tanks, which were parked menacingly near the railway station at Sojong, 13 miles south of Suwon.

Unless the tanks are eliminated, it is possible they might raise havoc behind American lines and with the advanced American elements which were cut off throughout the day.

Lambert's office in Tokyo reported earlier that he was feared cut off with the troops. He telephoned this dispatch to Tokyo later, showing that he was safe.

(This dispatch, referring to the Americans being cut off throughout the day, indicated the forward unit still might be isolated. Lambert was unable to file this dispatch until he returned from the forward position.)

American infantrymen and bazooka squads fought a four-hour battle with the tanks this afternoon without knocking them out.

The battle was witnessed by this correspondent, Carl Mydans of Time and Life, Marguerite Higgins of the New York Herald-Tribune, Dennis Warner, Australian journalist, and Andrew McCartney of Reuters, British News Service.

We arrived at an American command post early yesterday in a downpour of rain just as the senior officer slithered through the mud with information about the tank breakthrough.

The command post was in a squalid little Korean farmhouse. Several officers and men huddled under the porch out of the rain eating breakfast from a thermos container.

The senior officer unfolded a crackling map on the porch floor and pointed to the breakthrough area.

"This is the first time North Koreans have met American troops and I think they are going to get quite a shock out of it," he declared.

"We must find those tanks and knock hell out of them."

Clutching a "grease gun" (sub machinegun) in one hand and a pipe in another, the officer sent out bazooka squads to hunt and kill the tanks.

The command post erupted into action. A sergeant called up the headquarters bazooka squad and relayed the orders while standing in a pelting rain which ran off the roof in a stream and hissed into a dirty puddle.

A lanky GI with his bayonet stuck into his boot top and tied to his leg with a bit of grass rope shrugged into his raincoat and picked up the long slender steel tube known as the bazooka.

"Let's go, Jack," he said calmly to another soldier.

"Don't come back unless you get those tanks," the sergeant instructed his squad as they headed out through the rain.

The little team moved out, slithering in the mud. They went past gun emplacements, past infantry positions into a countryside strangely quiet except for the drum of the rain.

As they moved north they met many Korean soldiers fleeing south, including an arm-waving cavalryman who pulled up his horse, shouted "Tanks, tanks," and then whipped his horse into a gallop south.

About a mile from Sojong the cavalcade halted and bozooka squad soldiers entered the thick shrubbery at the roadside. First Lieut. Charles Payne, 29, of Neosho, Mo., commander of the tank-killer team, vaulted out of his jeep.

Suddenly the word came back: "Tanks approaching."

The men dug in. Payne snaked forward toward the edge of the road and advanced warily.

There was a long period of quiet, except for a shell now and then. We edged forward quietly and encountered placed Lieutenant Payne holding a 75-mm shell casing.

Had he seen the tanks? "Certainly," he replied. "He shot this at me," nodding at the shell casing. "I'm going to get my bazooka boys after him." Payne ran back to his squad.

We moved up the road to where the tank had appeared, parked briefly, then turned around and headed back for Sojong.

It had been a big one. It was 7 feet between treads. Its cleats had bitten deeply into the rocky road and the rain had not erased the marks. While it parked, somebody had dumped out a wash-basin full of empty machine-gun casings and a bottle labeled "Seoul Cider."

The bazooka squad moved up. A few Korean soldiers went along. We took positions in a cluster of Korean grave mounds on a small rise overlooking the city and the railway station.

There was a brittle clatter of small arms fire. Down the tracks from the Sojong railway station a squad of soldiers skulked about a silent locomotive and fired toward the tank. They were answered by short angry bursts of machine-gun fire. We could not see the tanks—yet—only a small hill village with a red brick church and a high steeple. Then we shifted through the grave mounds toward the tracks and suddenly there was a cry. "Tanks."

One of them sat on the railway tracks, possibly disabled mechanically but not in its venom. It was a squarish looking vehicle with a flat top turret from which protruded a long-barreled gun. The turret was painted white or gray and bore the number 209.

More bazooka men moved up, some through the grave mounds, others along a fringe of yellowing wheat by the rail tracks. From nearby on the grave mound there was a bazooka flash, and then the rocketing thump as the shell struck. Bazooka man Pvt. Alfred Beauchamp of New York City had scored a hit or a near miss.

The tank ripped out a blast of machinegun fire.

A handful of Korean soldiers edged nearer the tank, behind which loomed a second. The southerners said the North Koreans invited them to cross over and quit fighting "because we're all Koreans."

The tanks suddenly sprayed a quick savage burst over our grave mound hillside. The reporters sneaked down a slight defile and on to another rise, hiding in rifle pits evacuated a few minutes earlier by bazooka men now heading for the grave mounds.

For nearly two hours we watched the battle. We could see men darting around the tanks—North Koreans—and Americans and South Koreans trying to work up closer. Occasionally an American stood up, the long bazooka at his shoulder.

He blasted away, but the shells fell short, over, and missed completely.

Occasionally the tank swung its turret like a cobra weaving for a strike. Once, stung by fire coming from the grave mounds, it blasted a 75-shell into them. The Koreans and Americans slipped away, their feet red with the clay mud. The rain beat down. Water beaded on helmets and sluiced off raincoats, puddled in the folding clothing of those lying prone.

Water ran down faces, necks, arms.

The tanks remained truculently immobile. The South Koreans and Americans slipped down off the grave mound hill. The tanks laughed at them with machineguns. Northern infantrymen slipped into the grave mounds left a few minutes ago by the Americans and the southerners.

Darkness fell. The gloom matched that of the Americans who hadn't been able to knock out the tanks. The bazooka men withdrew. mortar teams came up. They were firing for range when we left.

(Later dispatches indicated one man was killed and another wounded in the bazooka-tank duel. The Associated Press said an ammunition bearer was shot through the heart when he raised his head to look at the tanks. "He coughed, cried out once, then died," said the dispatch. A shell fragment wounded another man.

(The United Press identified the dead youth as Pvt. Kenneth Shadrick, 20, a West Virginian, and said he was the first American infantryman killed in this conflict.)

Soviet Vessel Stops Japanese Fishing Ship

Tokyo (Wednesday), July 5 (AP). Unconfirmed Japanese newspaper reports today said a 3000-ton Soviet ship stopped and inspected a Japanese fishing boat yesterday about 15 miles from the port of Hanasaki on southeastern Hokkaido.

No previous interference with Japanese fishing craft has been reported so far inside the so-called "MacArthur Line" behind which Japanese ships are permitted to fish.

The Japanese Maritime Safety Board said it was investigating the report.

Air Force Lists 7 Missing in Korean War

The Air Force made public yesterday the names of four officers and three enlisted men missing on flights in the Korean war zone.

Since the start of the Korean war, the Defense Department has announced a total of 32 casualties, including 2 Air Force men killed; 3 Army men wounded, and 29 Army and Air Force men missing.

Announced yesterday as missing in flight since June 28 was First Lieut. Raymond J. Zyborski, husband of Mrs. Winnie Zyborski, living in Japan, and son of Mrs. Eda May Harts, Chicago.

Missing since July 2 was S/Sergt. Robert W. Fluke, son of Mrs. Alma W. Fluke, Southgate, Calif.

The remaining airmen listed yesterday are missing in the June 30 crash of a C-54 transport en route from Japan to Korea. The Army had previously announced the names of 16 troops missing in the same crash.

The missing Air Force personnel listed today were:

Capt. Clarence B. Odle, husband of Mrs. Nadine L. Odle, Hoopeston, Ill.; 1st Lieut. Gerald W. McPherson, husband of Mrs. Naomi McPherson, living in Japan, and son of Dewey McPherson, Cullom, Ill.; 1st Lieut. Glen L. Spradley, Chowchilla, Calif.

T/Sergt. Jack A. Morrison, husband of Mrs. Norma J. Morrison, living in Japan, and son of Mrs. Hugh J. Morrison, Denison, Tex.; T/Sergt. Robert F. Parks, husband of Mrs. Vivien M. Parks, living in Japan, and son of Mrs. Nellie P. Parks, Cleveland, Ohio.

As to Strength

Events Show ECA Wrong About Korea

South Korea had an estimated 100,000 troops—described as well-disciplined and "prepared to meet any challenge" when Northern Communists invaded.

The troop estimate and description were given to the Senate Appropriations Committee by William C. Foster, deputy administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, on June 13. That was 12 days before the Korean fighting broke out.

The transcript of the committee hearing made public yesterday dealt specifically with ECA's request for 100 million dollars to be spent in Korea during the fiscal year which began this week.

Foster told the committee:

"A vigorous training program has built up a well-disciplined army of 100,000 soldiers; one that is prepared to meet any challenge by North Korean forces, and one that has cleaned out the guerilla bands in one area after another.

Although the badly battered South Korean army made Foster's estimate look overly optimistic, Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) told a reporter he thinks the South Koreans will provide good fighting men yet when they are equipped to combat tanks.

"A man with a rifle can't do much against a tank," he observed. "We didn't give them anything to fight tanks with. But once we get the equipment in there, I think we'll find the South Koreans fighting courageously along with our own men."

Knowland was an Army officer in the last war.

E. A. J. Johnson, ECA director for Korea, told the committee in testimony made public yesterday that plans were under way to obtain South Korea's full production of tungsten concentrate for the United States. In this connection, he said the ECA had put up $300,000 to buy mining and processing machinery now being manufactured in this country for Korea.

Committee members engaged in a lengthy debate with Johnson and Dr. Wilhelm Anderson, his deputy, about whether South Korea was socializing its industries with the help of ECA funds. Anderson said 56 industries remained in government hands, but insisted that this was only because they had been seized from the Japanese by the United States and turned over to the Korean government which couldn't find private capital to run them.

Senator Cordon (R., Oreg.) said it looked to him as if the Koreans had "decided to remain more socialized than the United Kingdom." Chairman McKellar (D., Tenn.) said he didn't like it, adding that "between the Communists in Korea and those who are not Communists, I do not think there is very much difference between Socialists and Communists over there."

London, July 5 (U.P.).—"Missing" Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky was reported today to be at a Czechoslovakia health resort, increasing speculation that Communist countries are plotting a new campaign against Yugoslavia while Western powers are fighting in Korea.

Diplomatic sources here said Vishinsky was at the famous Czech baths at Karlsbad, which he visited early in 1949.

Vishinsky's 1929 trip was announced by Moscow. There has been no official word about the Foreign Minister since May 18, when he received United Nations Secretary General Trygve Lie at the Kremlin.

Since then, his deputy, Andrei Gromyko, former Soviet delegate to the U. N. has been running the Foreign Office.

The disappearance of Vishinsky from the Soviet scene coincided with a stepped up propaganda campaign charging that Yugoslavia is building "advanced military bases close to the frontiers of the peoples democracies" and that Premier Mashal Tito is planning to invade Albania and Hungary "at the bidding of his Anglo-American masters."

The June 30 issue of the Cominform Journal called on all Communist parties to take up the fight against Yugoslavia. It charged that Tito and his Politburo had shifted from "bourgeous nationalism to fascism."

"Struggle against the Fascist Tito clique is the international duty of all Communist parties," the Journal said. "The struggle against the Yugoslav Fascists—the worst enemies of peace—is the duty of all Communists."

It is no secret that to dispose of Tito is the Kremlin's foremost immediate aim. There no longer is any doubt that only force could obtain that object.

'Mercy' Doctor Resumes Practice

Manchester, N. H., July 5 (U.P.). Dr. Hermann N. Sander had a busy day today when he reopened his Manchester office just six months after he gave up his practive to face trial in the "mercy death" of a patient.

The 42-year-old physician, who was acquitted of a charge of murdering a woman cancer patient to save her from suffering, spent the morning making house calls. In the afternoon he returned to find a dozen patients in his Elm st. office.

Following his trial and acquittal, Dr. Sander's medical license was revoked. Last Friday it was returned, paving the way for his resumption of practice.

She Ass Foals 'Comicalest' Colt By Palomino

Pontiac, Mich., July 5 (U.P.).—A she ass foaled a colt by a Palomino stallion yesterday and owner Art Thorne said "it's the comicalest thing I ever did see."

Jackasses usually are mated with mares to produce mules, but Thorne reversed the process successfully and got a "hinny."

The colt, which frisked around Thorne's riding stable at nearby Rochester an hour after birth, is light in color, has a tail like a deer, and ears longer than a horse's.

"You'd know to look at it," Thorne said, "that it wasn't no horse and wasn't no mule."

U. N. to Study M'Arthur for Supreme Post

Lake Success, July 5 (NYHT).—The United Nations Security Council will meet soon, probably Friday, to consider a resolution paving the way for the formal appointment of Gen. Douglas MacArthur as supreme commander of the U. N. effort to oust the Communist invaders from South Korea.

In addition, the proposal to be put before the Security Council probably will recommend that the antiinvasion forces of the United Nations fly not only their national flags, but also the blue and white flag of the U. N., in order to emphasize the U. N.'s sponsorship of the Korean indeavor.

Under the formula now being considered, the Security Council would, in a sense, let a sub-contract to the United States for direction of the Korean campaign. This automatically would result in designation of General MacArthur by the United States to be the chief of the Korean commitment, which the United States undertakes to fulfill for the U. N., with the help of other governments.

It is not contemplated that the U. N. will have any direction over the operational side of the Korean campaign. That aspect will be entirely up to MacArthur and the United States, in consultation with other countries participating in the campaign.

Give Industry Atom at Once, Says Lilienthal

New York, July 5 (AP).—Immediate transfer of atomic energy to private industry was proposed today by David E. Lilienthal, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

His proposal was made in an article in Collier's. He said he has changed his mind.

"I was among those," he said, "who, back in 1945 and 1946, were unable to see any alternative to the course of Government monopoly. On the basis of experience we did not have in 1946, and in view of such new facts as the Russian bomb, I am convinced that our monopoly course is no longer justified and should be drastically changed."

The biggest gold brick in history, he said, is the notion that the United States has a secret formula.

Lilienthal said military secrecy about atomic weapons should continue, but that this secrecy should be no different than that for the planes which carry the bombs.

He proposed that private industry be given the facts about the plants and processes by which the United States is producing atomic energy and its products. This is now highly secret.

He would make four immediate changes in the McMahon act, the atomic energy law.

First, write into the law a statement that the industrial atom be developed by American competition.

Second, a reasonable chance to profit from atomic enterprise, and completely revise the present patent restrictions, by which all atomic patents go to the Government.

Third, kill the provision of law which places a political veto over scientific and industrial advance.

Fourth, consider how to give allowances to private industry when it risks millions on an atomic enterprise.

One of the repeated statements about atomic progress has been that the great expense involved cannot be undertaken by anyone but the Government.

Senate Unit Cuts Point 4 Aid Funds by 15 Millions

with other nations cutting their donations.

The Point Four program had been enthusiastically received in U. N., but yesterday's action conceivably can dampen the former ardor.

In other action, the Senate Appropriations Committee voted for the full amount—$1,222,500,000—requested for the second year of military aid abroad.

This includes one billion dollars of arms aid to the Atlantic Pact nations of western Europe, $131,500,000 for Greece, Turkey and Iran, and 75 million dollars for the general area of China.

In addition, there is 16 million dollars for Korea and the Philippines. Should the situation in Korea demand it, the President is given authority to switch certain sums to increase the flow of aid there.

The committee vote was apparently taken in antcipation of authorization legislation for the military aid program. A bill for the second year's authorization has passed the Senate and is to be taken up in the House next week.

In action last week, the Senate Committee voted $2,450,000,000 of new money for the third year of the Marshall Plan, a cut of about 200 million dollars below the Administration's last request.

The prospects for a restoration of some or all of the cut in the Point Four program are not too promising. By a parliamentary regulation the House will be unable to increase the amount provided by the Senate.

The only chance for more money, therefore, would be if Senators vote to overrule their Appropriations Committee when the foreign aid sections of the omnibus appropriations bill reach the Senate floor.

The Senate, however, has not been keen for the idea of Point Four, and has battled over it with a more favorably disposed House.

Asked about the action yesterday at his news conference, Secretary of State Acheson said the reduction was very disappointing, and that it struck him as a poor piece of economy.

Reds' Success With 'Aggression' Propaganda Alarms U. S. Officials

locked up in the Bureau of the Budget, and officials would not disclose even the approximate expenditure involved.

Ask U. N. Members to Aid

Meantime the State Department is asking that the true story of the Korean aggression be told and retold by the government information services of all the 43 countries that support the United Nations stand.

As still another effort to counteract the Soviet story, Secretary Acheson issued a statement yesterday comparing it to the lies spread by Adolf Hitler in the 1930s.

"In regard to the Korean hostilities," Acheson told his press conference, "four simple points must be recognized and long remembered by all the world. The people of this free Nation have clearly shown that they know the truth and are not going to be misled by false versions of it. These are the facts:

"1. The present troubles in Korea started, not when the United Nations Security Council acted or when the United States and others acted in support of the Security Council. It all started at dawn on Sunday, June 25, Korean time.

"2. At that time troops from North Korea, without any provocation whatever, crossed the 38th parallel and launched an aggressive attack against the Republic of Korea. All the reliable witnesses on the scene at the time, including the United Nations Commission, have established that the North Korean forces were the aggressors.

"Unprovoked Aggression"

"3. The Security Council of the United Nations acted in support of the Republic of Korea only after it was satisfied that this was a case of utterly unprovoked aggression.

"4. Any contention that hostilities were started by the Republic of Korea is clearly in the category of the Nazi claims of 1939 that Poland started hostilities by attacking Nazi Germany."

The Benton resolution itself calls for a six-point effort, including not only a greatly expanded State Department program, but also the creation of a new nongovernmental agency to use private resources in spreading American information and ideas.

Benton told the subcommittee, headed by Senator Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), that he viewed the fighting in Korea as "a direct failure of this Nation to project the idea of democracy in the world, and to publicize our determination to stand up for the things we believe in, and the principles we will fight for."

He spoke of the half-billion dollars poured into south Korea for economic recovery since the war, and contrasted it with the $1,400,000 appropriated last year for information and cultural activities in Korea.

"The tragedy is that while we sought to build prosperity on peace, on friendship with the south Koreans," Benton said, "the Russians fed tanks, guns, planes and fertile multiplying lies to the north Koreans. Russia mocked our virtues day after day with treacherous canards.

U. S. "Criminally Negligent"

"We gave the south Koreans peace. 'War-monger!' cried the Kremlin. Day after day the Soviet propagandists hammered away at north Koreans by radio, movies, pamphlets and diabolical rumors, to distort the peace we hoped to build in Korea into a bloated image of an angry god of war. They also fed this poison wholesale to the south Koreans.

"We let them get away with it. I tell you we have been criminally negligent."

Benton said that before the attack in Korea the Communists rounded up 5½ million North Korean signers of their so-called peace petition—"a wonderful contrast between Russian words and actions." He described the incessant use of the word "warmonger," as applied to the United States, as "a perfect example of the Hitler technique."

"Because it looks fantastic here we should not think it looks fantastic to the North Koreans," he said.

Marshall Insists on Truth

General Marshall, the next witness, insisted that the United States confine itself to the truth in its intensified information campaign. "The truth always prevails in the end, and we must stick to it," he declared.

General Eisenhower, who followed his wartime chief to the witness table, spoke of the "decisive" importance of morale in battle, and said one of the factors of morale was an understanding of the nature of the struggle.

"There is no victory here to be found solely in the piling up of military armaments," he said, "nor can we think only of scattering dollars around the world, because one of the objects of communism is to bankrupt us."

In addition to an expanded Government-sponsored information program, he suggested that everyone who got a passport from the State Department should learn "a sort of catechism of what he should say and do abroad."

Eventually, Eisenhower predicted, when the free world had won greater confidence and morale, there could be a slackening of the present rate of military expenditure.

Acheson Welcomes Resolution

When the wartime commanders had finished, Secretary Acheson walked in and read a prepared statement welcoming the Benton resolution. He said the Communist campaign of "falsification, distortion, suppression and deception" was a threat to the security of the whole free world, for its aims were to sow confusion, doubt and fear.

"So far as Communist efforts to foster falsehood about the United States are successful," the Secretary said, "they serve those Communist designs. They help to drive wedges between the United States and other countries, to create hesitancy, and to prevent clear, effective and unified resistance to Communist aims.

"We must therefore make unmistakable the truth about the United States and other free nations . . . The facts about what we do, the facts about why we do it, the facts about the way we do it, are integral parts of what we do in foreign affairs."

40 Battalions of Reserves May Be Called by U. S.

fighters from the United States to the Korean battle front.

It is expected that the piston-engine, longer range aircraft would replace some of the Lockheed jet F-80 fighters now being used for ground support work in Korea. The short-range, high altitude F-80 interceptors have not been very effective to date largely due to the distance between the front and their Japanese bases.

The Air Force did not say how many of the F-51s will be shipped to Japan, but USAF circles thought that 150—enough to equip two fighter groups—are contemplated. Some of them will have to be withdrawn from National Guard squadrons all over the country and thus cannot reach the Far East before late this month.

The Reserve units expected to be called up form part of the so-called "Class A" Reserve, which have a full complement of officers, 80 percent enlisted men and full equipment. They are separate battalions and companies of Corps and Army troops needed to round out what military men call a "division slice."

The Regular Army is particularly short of such units.

Types included in the organized, drilling Class A Reserve are combat engineers, anti-aircraft, artillery, Signal Corps, anti-tank, ordnance and quartermaster. Units in being total close to 25,000 officers and men.

Top Reserve officers predicted last night that if the plan is approved, at least 75 percent of the members of each unit will volunteer for service. A much smaller number would be willing to go if used as replacements, it was said, but their high spirit and unit pride should bring most of them into active service if kept together.

Other Reserve volunteers and Regular Army men would be used to fill out vacancies. The draft will be considered as a means to replace them only if found necessary later. However, should the Korean fighting be a fairly long drawn out affair and require additional forces to be thrown into action—as most officials here now believe inevitable—there is a very good prospect of inductions on a limited scale.

Officials here also are reconciled to more news like that yesterday of American troops being cut off by advancing Communist forces—for the time being. It should be noted that only one battalion of the 24th Division's forces—lightly supported by artillery—have been in action on the front. The other eight infantry battalions and all the heavier equipment—tanks and larger field guns—had to come by ship.

Full Division in Korea

However, officials here understood that the entire division now is in Korea and should be supporting the advance forces flown in last week before very long. Movement of the troops north over South Korea's limited rail system and almost nonexistent roads cannot be completed overnight, though.

Wire dispatches and officials here also reported these other steps taken to reinforce the American forces fighting in Korea:

1. Seven American airlines will be pressed into service to help ferry fighting men and supplies across the Pacific. It was disclosed that contracts have been made with Pan American World Airways, Northwest Airlines, United Airlines, Transocean Airlines, Seaboard & Western Airlines, the Flying Tigers and Overseas National Airlines to provide planes to augment the regular military air transport service schedules.

At least two bases in the Aleutians—scheduled for shutdown under the Defense economy program—will be kept open to refuel the stepped-up trans-Pacific flights, a spokesman said. One is Shemya Air Force Base, while the other or others was not indicated. Five bases had been ordered closed.

30 Superforts Reach Hawaii

2. Thirty Boeing B-29 Superforts landed in Hawaii en routed from the West Coast to Japan. Two groups—the 22d and 92d—were reported on the way west from their Riverside, Calif., and Spokane, Wash., bases.

3. Sixth Army Headquarters in San Francisco announced that one battalion of the Fourth Regimental Combat Team—from 800 to 1000 troops—will leave by ship from Fort Lewis, Wash., to bolster Alaskan defenses "in the near future."

4. The 7000-man First Marine Division—actually only a reinforced regimental combat team—and the First Marine Air Wing were alerted at their Southern California bases and expect to leave "at any moment." News reports said the wing's two groups, comprising 144 fighters and 59 other planes, would move to the Far East.

5. The escort carrier Sicily left San Diego for the Western Pacific yesterday, with her decks loaded with planes. Officials here said the CVE had replacement aircraft aboard for stocking Pacific air depots.

Bataan on Shakedown

6. The light carrier Bataan, pulled out of the mothball fleet two months ago, left Norfolk on a "shakedown" cruise before joining the Pacific Fleet.

7. Leaves of all transient naval personnel awaiting assignment at West Coast receiving stations were canceled. Officials there said the order was to assure full complements for ships heading westward.

8. Three Canadian destroyers sailed from Esquimalt, B. C. to join U. N. naval forces operating in Far Eastern waters. They are the 2000-ton Cayuga, the 2500-ton Sioux, and the 2000-ton Athabaskan, the United Press reported.

Soviet Flag Left Out Of July 4 Celebration

Baltimore, July 5 (AP).—It was the height of Baltimore's Fourth of July celebration in the Municipal stadium last night.

A replica of the Liberty Bell pealed. A bomb went off. Out paraded Boy Scouts carrying the flags of all the United Nations.

All except Russia, that is. The Soviet flag was left behind in an oversight, it was said.

There it stood alone in the outfield of the baseball diamond. In left field.

maries but on three occasions has elected a Senator in the general election. Alexander made news at the start of the campaign when he switched from the Democratic party to the GOP for the race.

The hottest congressional race was for the Fifth District sea being vacated by Monroney. tate Sen. John Jarman paced the field but will have a run-off against William A. Berry. Both are young war veterans from Oklahoma City.

These five incumbent Congressmen—all Democrats—were in the primary: Representatives Dixie Gilmer, first district; W. G. Stigler, second; Tom Steed, fourth; Toby Morris, sixth; and Victor Wickersham, seventh.

Two others, Carl Albert of the third and George Howard Wilson of the eight, were unopposed and will not face an election until November.

And, on the basis of incomplete returns, Gilmer will oppose State Representative Wesley Disney in the runoff and Wickersham will meet Lloyd E. Church.

Truman Campaign Aide Indicted in Passport Racket

San Francisco, July 5 (U.P.).—Attorney George T. Davis, Northern California campaign manager for President Truman in the last election, was indicted today on charges of defrauding the Government in a fake passport racket for Chinese.

Davis, 42, and a Chinese, Lee Gim Keong, were charged with conspiring three years ago to obtain passports for Chinese with false birth certificates.

Davis has been mentioned recently in Democratic circles as a possible successor to United States Attorney Frank J. Hennessey, head of the office that will prosecute Davis.

Drink MILK—for GOODNESS Sake!
(No. 3 of a Series)

THE BEST IS NONE TOO GOOD

STEAM STERILIZATION is the FOOLPROOF method for keeping milking equipment FREE from IMPURITIES. No germ can exist in utensils scalded for 30 minutes in live steam.

Chemical sterilization can become slipshod! Unless exact strength is maintained chemical sterilization becomes hit-and-miss. A weak solution is ineffective. Too strong a solution leaves a taste.

STEAM STERILIZATION is never slip-shod—can't leave a taste—or odor.

NLRB Gets Report Today on Area Row

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A field investigator for the National Labor Relations Board yesterday completed the preliminary probe into the unfair labor practice charges filed against the AFL Building Trades Council here and two of its affiliated unions.

The charges stem out of two disputes on the area construction projects of Victor I. Beauchamp Inc.

One dispute involves the conflicting claims of the AFL carpenters and AFL ironworkers over the right to install aluminum-frame windows.

The second controversy involves the conflicting demands of the Construction Contractors Council, an organization of contractors and subcontractors, and the AFL Building Trades Council comprising most AFL locals in this area.

As a result of the two disputes, virtually all work has come to a halt on six Beauchamp construction jobs.

The structural ironworkers and the reinforced concrete workers, who belong to the same Ironworkers International Union, have failed to show up on the Beauchamp jobs for several weeks.

Both unions have been charged with violating a section of the Taft-Hartley Management-Labor Act," which outlaws the jurisdictional strike, that is, a strike by one union to force an employer to assign that union the work being performed by the members of another labor group.

The Beauchamp company asserts that the ironworkers' locals struck after the installation of the aluminum-frame windows was given to the carpenters, pending settlement of the dispute by the AFL's Jurisdictional Board.

Raymond O. Boyd, business agent for the Reinforced-Concrete Workers Union 201, yesterday denied management charges. He said the ironworkers didn't want to work on Beauchamp projects because of "aggravated cases of contract violation" in the assignment of work to the craft unions. Beauchamp, he charged, continually discriminated against the ironworkers.

Last Thursday, the AFL Building Trades Council placed pickets with "unfair" signs at the Beauchamp projects, and all the union workers—excepting the carpenters, who are not affiliated with the council—walked off.

The union council set up the pickets after Beauchamp failed to sign an agreement with the council. The agreement calls for Beauchamp to hire only subcontractors who have contracts with AFL craft unions. Beauchamp holds that the agreement is illegal, under the Taft-Hartley Act; that it calls for a closed shop, that is, the hiring of union men exclusively.

Beauchamp also took the position that the Construction Contractors Council, an employers association, was his bargaining agent, and that the AFL Trades Council would have to deal with the CCC.

On Thursday, when the AFL Trades Council established pickets at the Beauchamp projects, the Construction Contractors Council filed unfair labor practice charges against the union council and the two ironworkers' locals.

NLRB Investigator Henry Segal was sent here at once from the Baltimore regional office. Segal is due to make his report today to Regional Director John Penello, and the latter will follow up with recommended action to the office of the NLRB General Counsel here.

The affected Beauchamp projects include: Church of Christ Building, 4801 16th st. nw., $380,000; Fisher Scientific Co. building, 7722 Woodbury dr. Silver Spring, $250,000; St. John's Church school, 10501 Georgia ave., Silver Spring, $225,000; Bethesda-Chevy Chase high school cafeteria, 4301 East-West Highway, $180,000; National Association of Master Plumbers building, 1016 20th st. nw, $110,000; renovation of Government Services, Inc., tourist cabins, Hains Point, $55,000.

Truman Hope For Rail Strike End Reported

Chicago, July 5 (AP).—President Truman was reported as hopeful of a break in the railroad strike, but it didn't come today.

A spokesman for the striking AFL Switchmen's Union said, "we met with the National (Railway) Meditation Board but we made no appreciable progress."

Earlier today, Senator Darby (R., Kan.), after a conference with the President in Washington, said he is hopeful the strike is near the end. He said Mr. Truman told him "everything possible is being done" and that the President is hopeful of developments which will be "good news."

Some 4000 switchmen walked out June 25 on five Western and Midwestern railroads, demanding a 40 hour work week at 48 hours pay. A presidential fact-finding board had recommended a 40 hour week for them and for 75,000 other yard workers but at a wage increase of only 18 cents an hour.

Area Gets Rid Of Iceboxes

of the dangerous iceboxes in recent days.

In Prince Georges County, iceboxes will be taken away in several of the municipalities, but in most parts of the county residents must arrange for disposal themselves.

C. B. Runyon, who handles trash collections in Falls Church and Fairfax County on a contract, said he had received one call for removal of an icebox. This box, Runyon said, was a one-ton commercial walk-in refrigerator that had been discarded. Because of its size, he said he asked the owner to strip it of its lock and render it harmless.

No requests for pickups were reported in Arlington and Alexandria.

Area residents who want advice on what agency to call for removal of their iceboxes can telephone Washington Post city desk (National 4200).

Young Husband Shoots Wife After Beating Her With Gun

("Just to scare him," Vann later told police.)

He fired another shot into the floor at his wife's feet. He punched his wife, then grabbed her by the arm and forced her from the apartment.

In the street, Vann fired a shot at the sky, then pushed his wife into his coupe and drove away. At Sheridan Circle, Vann's car ran out of gasoline and he pulled it to the curb.

He stepped into the path of a cab and forced it to stop. He told the cabbie, James W. Haney, 33, of 3332 Chauncey dr., Mount Rainier, Md., he was out of gas.

Haney protested he had a fare in the back of his cab. Vann drew his automatic and announced: "You'll take me . . . now."

The cab went to Wisconsin ave. and Upton st. nw., where Vann bought a two-gallon can of gasoline.

The cab continued on to 3100 Macomb st. nw., where the passenger in the back was dropped. En route back to Vann's stalled car, Vann and his wife began a furious argument. He rapped her over the head with the butt of his gun and threatened to shoot her.

"I wish you would," Haney heard the woman say. "I've had all the beating I can stand."

Six quick shots spurted from the automatic. One struck Mrs. Vann in the leg. Another passed uncomfortably close to Hacker Haney's face. They drove on.

Back at Vann's car, the cab driver waited while Vann poured the gasoline into his tank. Vann then handed the empty container to Haney.

"Here," he said, "you can get your fare by collecting the deposit on the can." (Haney did collect the 50-cent deposit later).

. . . after shooting spree

Haney watched as Vann and his wounded wife drove off into Rock Creek Park, then sped to the Eighth Precinct to tell his story. Police cars began a thorough search of the park.

Detective Sergts. Murray Kutner and Herbert Young of the robbery squad were the ones who located Vann's car, parked.

They found Mrs. Vann, moaning, screaming and bleeding, her head cradled in her husband's lap as he attempted to soothe her.

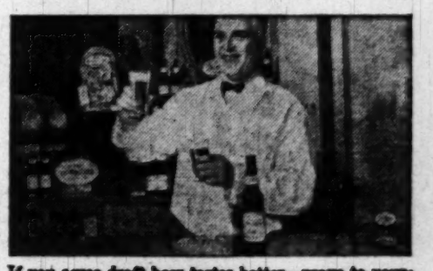
*Behind-the-Bar Test Convinces Experts

"Can you taste the difference?" we asked Washington bar owners. Behind the bar we filled a glass with Old Georgetown Beer poured from a bottle.

Another glass was filled with Old Georgetown draft beer from the keg. "Can you taste the difference between Draft and Bottled?" we asked.

One glass . . . then the other . . . was tasted. In every case the answer was the same. "Both have that good draft beer taste!"



If you agree draft beer tastes better—prove to yourself Old Georgetown really seals in real draft beer flavor in bottles and cans.

'One-Armed Bandits' Are Busy at Beach

Colonial Beach, Va., July 5 (Spl). The sun was shining brightly today for local slot machine operators as they counted the loot left behind by a heavy holiday crowd.

Straight shots and mixed drinks for the thirsty, slot machines for those with coins and strong arms was their huckster cry as they happily contemplated a summer free of police interference.

They could smile at Virginia law which outlaws such goings-on. There gamble and drink spots are located a short distance from the shore, just far enough to be over the lowwater mark of the Potomac River which establishes the Virginia-Maryland line.

The establishments are within the jurisdiction of Maryland and are located directly across the river from counties where slot machines and whiskey over the bar are legal. They are connected to the Virginia shoreline by hastily constructed plank piers.

Some Colonial Beach property owners are up in arms over the blossoming of the off-shore casinos, but so far Virginia authorities have said they are powerless to act.

Deputy Sheriff Lloyd Farmer of King George County, Va., at the beach on special duty for the holiday, asked:

"What can we do? They're in Maryland and I'm in Virginia. I'm not worrying."

The original "Pleasure Island" boat is tied to a pier right in the middle of the residential district.

In the last few days three other bars, most of them attractive, have sprung up on the end of piers. These have an aggregate of 115 slot machines ranging from nickels to silver dollars.

Another bar started operation Monday, and a sixth pier—also directly in front of summer cottages—is under construction for a like use.

The residents of Colonial Beach have two reactions. Those with cottages within sound distance of the pleasure places have put them up for sale. Before taking that step, they issued a vigorous protest to the town council of the resort center.

But some businessmen are delighted. They say the lure of the gambling places has drawn the largest crowds to the resort in recent years. Even the beer parlors on Virginia shores seemed to be doing a good business today.

D. C.-Balto. Blvd.

Judge to Jail Drivers Who Go Over 70

Savage, Md., July 5 (AP).—Trial Magistrate J. Edwin Haslup, whose jurisdiction covers about 11 miles of Washington-Baltimore blvd., said today he will impose jail terms on those convicted of driving more than 70 miles an hour.

He started the new policy by prescribing a 30-day jail sentence for Herman R. Braxton, 32-year-old Washingtonian.

Police testified Braxton hit more than 90 miles an hour in a five-mile chase along the boulevard from Dorsey to Savage early Monday morning.

Maximum speed limit on the boulevard is 55 miles an hour and on many stretches it is 30 and 40 miles an hour.

Meantime, a special committee of trial magistrates and traffic officials is set for its first meeting in Baltimore Thursday to consider steps against highway accidents.

The committee was set up last week at a special State-wide meeting of magistrates summoned by Governor Lane.

One of the problems to be considered is the wide variance of fines and penalties imposed and the amount of bond required in traffic violation cases by magistrates across the State.

Another is a uniform code of evidence rules in drunken driving and speeding cases.

Magistrates on the committee include Alton Y. Bennett of Frederick, Allan Bowie of Upper Marlboro, Lee S. Gillis of Easton, Thomas H. Mayfield of Ellicott City, John J. Casland of Towson and Joseph M. Wyatt, chief magistrate of the Baltimore traffic court.

Other officials in the group include Col. Carey Jarman, superintendent of the Maryland State Police, George N. Lewis of the State Roads Commission, and Inspector Bernard J. Schmidt, chief of the traffic division of the Baltimore Police Department.

Fairfax Annex To Courthouse Wins Approval

Plans for a $980,000 addition to the Fairfax County Courthouse at Fairfax were given final approval of the county's board of supervisors yesterday.

Following the action, county officials said competitive bids on the project would be called for in August, after some minor revisions of the existing plans. Actual construction probably will start in September, according to Arthur Schaffer, chairman of the supervisors' building committee.

Besides providing space for all county offices, the new structure will house on its second floor a modern jail to replace the existing county jail. The old structure, termed a "firetrap" by Sheriff John Taylor, has been the scene of two successful prison breaks in the last two years.

At yesterday's meeting the board named five residents to represent the county on a proposed Northern Virginia Park Authority, which would work with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission

High Waters Trap Cars Parked at Gallinger

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

AFTERNOON STORM—Although the Weather Bureau reported that little more than a half-inch of rain fell during yesterday's storm, owners of the above cars parked at Gallinger Hospital were greeted by this disheartening scene after the rain. A lightning bolt also blacked out the hospital for an hour and a half. Reports of floods kept police and firemen busy was the first for a watergate concert since 1947.

Four homes also were struck by lightning during the two-hour storm—at 4308 Alabama ave. se.; 6105 Jost st., Fairmont Heights, Md.; 1615 N. Jackson st., Arlington, and 1029 Stoddard pl. se.

The Weather Bureau reported slightly more than a half inch of rain fell after the storm started at 4:38 p. m. It seemed like more to the District Sewer Department, which reported a hundred calls from "all over town" for flooded basements and obstructed basins. The Fire Department also received many flood trouble calls.

The Potomac Electric Power Co. reported power failures were "below normal" for the storm's intensity. Lights went out in the area of 5th and Peabody sts. and Georgia ave. nw.; Branch ave. in Silver Hill, Md., South Fort dr. in Silver Spring; Piney Branch rd. and New Hampshire ave. in Silver Spring, and in the 500 block of 44th st. ne.

In Virginia, power company officials reported between 300 and 400 trouble calls, and "small failures" throughout the area served by Vepco. A company spokesman said lights as far south as McLean, Va., were affected by the storm.

Falls Church police had to block off Hillwood ave. and Washington st. at the height of the storm when a sewer overflowed. A D. C. fire engine from Company 15 got stuck on the way to a lightning call when it ran into a flash flood at Minnesota ave. and N st. se.

In Prince Georges County, streets were blocked off by water at 42d and Edmonston rd., at 54th ave. and Tilden st., and Kenilworth ave. and Quincy st. Marlboro police reported a washout at Belt and Southern aves. in Bradbury Heights.

The Weather Bureau said the storm sent the temperature down from 86 degrees to 72 in about half an hour.

The temperature went up from a low of 69 at 5:20 a.m. to a high of 86 at 2:20 p.m. The official forecast shows more scattered showers and thunderstorms in the offing this afternoon, with a high of about 86 degrees.

First of the Fine Cars in Value

The Car that puts your Best Foot forward

WE think you'll agree that the whole story of an automobile isn't told in its power, its room, its styling, even in its ride.

There is the all-important point about what a car does to you—and that's where ROADMASTER really shines.

For you can't slip into this bonny beauty's broad seats without feeling like somebody pretty special.

When you take its neat wheel in your hand—when you cut loose, with a toe-touch, the rich baritone of its big Fireball straight-eight power plant—when you feel the smooth surge of its Dynaflow-cushioned take-off—

Man, then you know you've got a real automobile!

And don't overlook this:

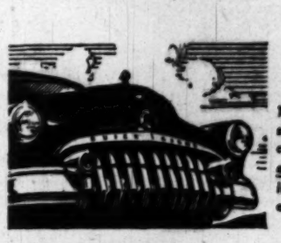
That graceful sweep of chrome along the fender—found on no other car made today—is a mighty eye-catching note of distinction.

Those four Ventiports, too, cause many a head to turn—they mark you unmistakably as the owner of the biggest and best Buick built—a car as fine and rich as any man has need for.

There are a lot of good, solid, dollars-and-cents reasons for making ROADMASTER your choice over any other car:

Its size. The commanding performance of its 152-hp Fireball valve-in-head straight-eight engine. Dynaflow Drive standard. A ride that's quite matchless in its gentle softness. Distinguished styling from bold, protective front end to gleaming "double bubble" taillight.

But if you're ready for a car that's more than just an automobile—if you want one that puts your best foot forward in any company—that's the real reason for seeing your Buick dealer quickly—to talk turkey about a ROADMASTER.



FOUR-WAY FORETHOUGHT
This rugged front end (1) sets the style note, (2) saves on repair costs—vertical bars are individually replaceable, (3) avoids "locking horns," (4) makes parking and garaging easier.

Pressure on RFC Hinted in Report

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

Senate investigators yesterday quizzed RFC on whether it had a uniform policy on loans or yielded to congressional and other pressures.

The Senate Banking and Currency subcommittee under Senator J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.) quizzed John J. Hagerty, former manager of the RFC Boston office and now special assistant to the agency's board of directors, about the contrasting loans to two Massachusetts woolen mills.

In the one case RFC loaned $1,200,000 to the Hayward Woolen Co. in East Douglas, Mass., after considerable congressional pressure.

In the other case RFC loaned $1,050,000 to the Hayward-Schuster Woolen Mills, Inc., also of East Douglas, which had no congressional assistance. There is no connection between the two firms.

Objection to Sound Loan

A staff memorandum said:

"These cases present a sharp contrast: The industry is the same in both cases, the borrowers are of about the same size and were situated in similar circumstances and the same location. Yet strong objections were raised to the sounder of the two loans and passed over lightly in the other instance.

"The pressure of regional interests was not evident in the Hayward-Schuster case, presumably as much a part of the New England industry and as worthy of saving as Hayward Woolen. By attention to business, rather than by enlisting pressure, Hayward-Schuster appears to be working out of a difficult situation while Hayward Woolen Co. continues to lose ground. It is difficult to find consistent application of lending policy in these two cases."

Hagerty denied any pressure was involved. He said it was "normal" for the RFC to receive requests and inquiries from Senators and House members about loans to industries in their districts which are in distress.

Because a member of Congress takes up the matter with RFC, Hagerty said, "the inference cannot be drawn that he is using pressure." On the contrary, Hagerty maintained, a member of Congress is only doing his duty.

The committee, however, did not succeed in getting any uniform policy outlined.

The staff memorandum was full of the activities of an unnamed Massachusetts Congressman, who was urged by Hagerty "to get Congressman McCormack in your corner."

The record does not show whether or not McCormack intervened in the case.

The record does show, however, that in the case of the Hayward Woolen Co., the whole RFC board met with a Massachusetts delegation in Congress.

Present were former Representative George J. Bates (R.), and Representatives Harold D. Donohue (D.), Foster Furcolo (D.), John F. Kennedy (D.), Thomas J. Lane (D.), Philip J. Philbin (D.) and Edith Nourse Rogers (R.). Representatives Joseph W. Martin, jr. (R.), Richard B. Wigglesworth (R.), and Angier L. Goodwin (R.), were represented at the gathering.

To Vote Monday

Senate Floor Okay of Pike Held Hopeful

Democratic Senate Leaders yesterday took new hope that they will be able to overturn an unfavorable committee recommendation and confirm Sumner T. Pike to another term as Atomic Energy Commissioner.

Fearing a vote with many Senators absent yesterday, Democratic Leader Lucas (Ill.) put off a vote on Pike's confirmation until 4 p. m. Monday. He and Senator McMahon (D.,Conn.), chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, indicated confidence that they could beat the opposition to Pike.

One of the original members of the commission, Pike was acting chairman since the resignation in February of David E. Lilienthal. President Truman renominated him to a four-year term, but his term expired Friday before his renomination came up for a vote.

Record D. C. Fund Voted

ter Hunt (D., Wyo.) stoutly opposed such a move.

"I have very serious doubts of the advisablity of reducing the Federal contribution," said Hill, explaining the amount was fixed by the same legislative bill which raised the taxes of District residents.

Hunt declared the Federal government met 40 percent of the District budget in 1922, while today's contribution is only about 10 percent.

He pointed out that Uncle Sam occupies about 42 percent of the total acreage in the District.

"The percentage borne by the United States has been constanly decreasing since 1922," said Hunt, "whereas taxes in the District have been constantly increasing."

Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), referring to the House action in reducing the Federal payment, told reporters later he might move to cut the amount in committee. The Federal fund for the District is carried in the separate omnibus appropriations bill, which is expected to reach the Senate floor within the next 10 days.

In another statement, Senator Hill reminded his colleagues that pending legislation to put policemen on a five-day week would take about a million dollars from the expected city surplus.

Senator Wherry raised the question of higher rank for the police vice squad head in an effort to make clear that the committee intended most of the 30 additional policemen provided in the bill should be assigned to augment the vice squad.

Hill replied that actual assignment was up to the superintendent of police. He agreed, however, that the committee felt the vice squad should have "first priority."

Flood Drowns 3 Near Pittsburgh; Trailer Camps Hit

Pittsburgh, July 5 (U.P.)—Three persons were drowned and several were missing today in flash floods which swept through Pittsburgh suburban valleys during a heavy rain storm.

The unexpected rush of water hit hard at two trailer camps in the lower Ohio valley. Two men were lost around Emsworth.

The flood swept down from north of Pittsburgh and struck heavily at towns along the Ohio River below the "Golden Triangle."

Trailer camps at Emsworth and Moon Township were turned into floating villages. The unanchored trailers bobbed around like corks in the torrent of water. Women carried their children to safety through waist-deep water.

Truman Act Is Held Legal By Douglas

President Truman's use of American armed forces in Korea was "in thorough harmony with the legislative intent of the framers of the Constitution," Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) told the Senate yesterday.

Douglas went into the record books to show that during debate on the Constitution the Founding Fathers voted to substitute the word "declare" for the word "make" in the clause which gives Congress power "to declare war." Madison, said Douglas, noted that this was for the purpose of "leaving to the Executive the power to repel sudden attacks."

The senator declared that on many occasions Presidents have used armed force without a declaration of war by Congress.

Douglas said that "international situations frequently call for the retail use of force in localized situations which are not sufficiently serious to justify the wholesale and widespread use of force which a formal declaration of war would require."

He added that it "would be below the dignity of the United States to declare war on a pigmy state" and that the President's method was "particularly useful when dealing with satellite or puppet states of another big power."

Douglas noted that until the Korean affair, "use of armed force has been almost invariably ordered by our Presidents as a protection against immediate and direct attacks as threats to American lives and property."

This time, he said, the Communists doubtless would move elsewhere if successful in Korea. Hence the "ultimate security of the United States depends upon convincing the communist aggressors that we will resist aggression and check it in its earliest stages."

The Senator said there are "grave dangers" in giving a President discretionary power to use armed forces. But he said a check exists in the President's own feeling of responsibilty and in the Congress' power of impeachment.

Congressional procedures, including the unlimited debate of the Senate, should be limited to make it easier for the President to consult it in a national emergency, he said.

"When it comes to Milk, Commissioners, I'm qualified to judge!"

It wasn't so very long ago that the hospital took my tonsils out 'cause the nurse said that good cowboys didn't have them. All the things they used for my operation they steam sterilized first to kill tiny bacteria that cause people a lot of trouble. Hospitals have to be sure about everything, and that's the way every one of us should feel about milk, too.

Steam sterilization of milk-handling equipment is the sure way to keep it clean, pure, and sweet. Our elders made sure of that twenty-five years ago by really cracking down on bacteria in milk. The Health Officer forced every farm supplying the District to sterilize every milk pail, milk can and other utensil in live steam. That's why we have the best milk in the world right here at home.

Before that time milk drinking was as dangerous as being a cowboy on our TV set. Those tiny things like bacteria got into it and made all sorts of trouble for us kids. I've heard my grandpop say that many got sick and some didn't even grow up at all.

Now there seems to be some controversy over a temporary measure made several years before my time.

A little milk was permitted into the District from farms using an inferior method of washing their utensils in chemicals. It's suggested that we continue these temporary measures and permit the chemical swishers from everywhere to bring their milk here . . . even though there's plenty of milk for all us kids from farms using steam sterilization. It sounds like back-sliding to me.

We still can have the cleanest, the sweetest, the purest milk in the world and protect our health if we all stick up for steam sterilization. The 1,700 dairy farmers in our locality, members of this association, have the boilers and all the equipment, such as this sterilizing cabinet, that's accepted under the association's high standards.

The members of this association of dairy farmers are glad to keep steam sterilization. They can't keep it if a double-health-standard is allowed in the District milk supply.

Here's What You Can Do

On July 10, a hearing will be held by the District Commissioners on the subject of making the temporary measure on chemical sterilization permanent. We want you to go to this hearing, or send a representative from your church or club. We know the Commissioners are interested in our welfare, so speak up for us and let them know that sweet, clean, pure milk . . . through live steam sterilization is of vital interest to you, too.

Kill It

The Senate votes today on a resolution to kill the plan for transferring the RFC, now an independent agency, to the Department of Commerce. Senator Fulbright, who introduced the resolution, has headed a committee investigating the activities of the RFC that has uncovered some very unsavory instances of political favoritism in extension of loans as well as mistakes of judgment in making loans. When the report of this committee and its recommendations are ready for submission, the Senate will be in a much better position to decide what disposition to make of the RFC.

In the opinion of The Washington Post the time has come to abolish the agency or at least put it on an inactive standby basis to be revived only if an emergency arises. In any case the proposal to transfer the RFC to the Department of Commerce is most unwise, since it would then be subjected to increased political pressure. If the RFC is not abolished, it should either retain its independent status or else be transferred to the Treasury Department in accordance with the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

Mundt Bill

The eruption in Korea has been used by some Republicans as a pretext for reviving the Mundt anti-Communist bill. They want action on the issue before the Eighty-first Congress adjourns and goes off for its vacation. We hope that the heat in Washington will induce the legislators to forgo this overheated idea and put the matter over for calmer consideration, if necessary, next winter.

While disclaiming any intention to outlaw the Communist Party, the Mundt bill would require all "Communist political organizations" and all "Communist front organizations" to register with the Attorney General and maintain accurate lists of their members; it would deny use of the mails or radio broadcast facilities to any of these groups unless its message was plainly designated as coming from a Communist source; it would forbid members to hold Government jobs or obtain passports. The indubitable effect of this would be to outlaw not only the Communist Party but every voluntary association that might be officially designated subversive, and to put under a cloud those innocents who have ever belonged to one.

In addition, the Mundt bill would create a new crime—knowingly to conspire or agree with any other person "to perform any act which would substantially contribute to the establishment within the United States of a totalitarian dictatorship." This could mean anything at all—including a campaign contribution to the Republican or Democratic Parties which have been variously called Fascist and Communist in intent by their opponents.

To be sure, the laws need strengthening to meet the challenge coming from conspiratorial communism, but, as we have reiterated, the way we would start would be by insisting upon a public accounting of funds collected by organizations asking for financial support. Disclosure of this sort is consonant with democratic processes; punishment for lawful associations is not. The latter would endanger all our institutions.

Sooner Senator

Like the recent senatorial campaign in North Carolina, the Democratic primary fight in Oklahoma between Senator Elmer Thomas and Representative A. S. Mike Monroney must be decided in a runoff. However, the fact that Mr. Monroney maintained a lead over Senator Thomas despite the presence of five other candidates in the field shows the effective and intensive campaign he conducted over the State. There are plenty of vulnerable spots in Senator Thomas' 23-year record in the Senate, and Mr. Monroney took full advantage of them.

The primary, and the July 25 runoff, are not really tests of the Fair Deal. Both Senator Thomas and Representative Monroney have supported major Administration measures, though differing between themselves. What has been the big issue in the campaign is Senator Thomas' obstructionist stand on public power, as expressed in his opposition to funds for the Southwest Power Administration on the Senate floor last year. Mr. Monroney also pulled out all the stops in recounting how Senator Thomas made a fool of himself in his remarks on Swedish hospitality last year, and how he broke the confidence of the Appropriations Committee in disclosing information given by General Bradley in executive session. Likewise, Mr. Thomas' record of personal manipulations in the cotton market, exposed by Drew Pearson, has come in for deserved attack.

The one regrettable feature of the campaign is that it has required most of Mr. Monroney's time since the first of the year, though the results may well be worth it. He has been one of the ablest members of the House, with a consistent and enlightened voting record on behalf of good government; perhaps his most noteworthy work has been in pushing through the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. He would be a distinct gain for the Senate in place of a man whose chief legislative distinction has been demagoguery and advocacy of special and personal interests.

Price Of Sanctions

John Foster Dulles struck the proper note in his Independence Day talk when he warned that the Korean action may force us to "cut down on our economic indulgence." Assuredly, with American troops now in battle and American planes and ships on combat missions against the Communist invaders of South Korea, the price, alas, is not going to be small. The most obvious and irreparable loss, of course, will be in lives. But aside from the cost in manpower, the burden of sustaining even a police action is substantial—more substantial, unfortunately, than had been supposed. Whether it can be carried out without major dislocations in the economy, necessitating wartime controls, will depend on how quickly the aggression can be repelled. And we must end this ramified menace quickly.

There is talk now that three, and possibly six, American divisions may be needed to roll back the invaders. Even with the addition of Marines, that would place a great strain on current Army strength; before the fighting, for example, General MacArthur had only four divisions at his disposal. Assuming that three extra divisions could be drawn from Japan, they would have to be replaced from somewhere. The diversion of any substantial number of men to Korea would require expanded training as well as considerable effort on material and shipping.

Likewise, with respect to the Air Force and the Navy, account must be taken of probable losses. Already, for example, the Air Force seems to be suffering for want of suitable planes. Pilots complain that the jet F-80, which has been acclaimed as a marvel of speed, is too fast to enable them to draw beads on the slower piston-engined Russian Yak fighters. Nor are the huge B-29s suitable for fighter-bombing and strafing missions. Here again the need is demonstrated for the kind of tactical aviation support for which the Army has long pleaded. Strategic bombers are not much use under Korean conditions.

Although by no means all available resources have been committed, it is apparent that all this effort, and necessary replacements, are going to cost money. Even with the additional aircraft funds provided by the House, the 13.2-billion-dollar 1951 defense budget obviously is outmoded. How much more will be needed is for the Joint Chiefs of Staff to recommend, and it obviously must be considered on events. But Congress might well be thinking about the additional taxes that may become necessary.

At the same time, we think military officials have been wise in deferring plans for any general mobilization of the National Guard and reserves at this time. In addition to the disruption such a move would cause, it might in itself provoke all-out war. What is essential is that the military be given all tools to bring the conflict to a swift conclusion. For unless the Korean campaign can be ended shortly, the encouragement that this kind of tying-down action may give the Russians will require a major realignment of our military forces. It is already evident that forces and weapons geared to carrying any major war to Russia herself are not well suited for use against limited aggression.

Blocking Unity

Toward Europe, the United States, in its effort to create positions of strength as an insurance against war, has hitherto pursued a policy of lumping the Continent together in the hope of promoting unity or integration. It is one of the ironies of history that the restoration of a European order has become the preoccupation of America rather than of Europe. Lewis Galentiere explains this anomaly is the current issue of Foreign Affairs. He defines the problem of the Europeans as a sort of doctrinal disease. "The European," he says, "is asking what man ought to be, the American is asking what man ought to do." He says:

> What stands in the way of European unity, even within the nations, is the tendency in Europe to ask—not is this the soundest way to secure the general good, but, is this the Communist way, or the Catholic way, or the Socialist way? Loyalty to doctrine being thus deemed the highest good, every proposed solution of a pressing problem tends to be fraudulent.

The essay had hardly been written when a vivid illustration of the Galentiere thesis became available. It is the Labor Party's manifesto on "European unity," a copy of which is now available. After acknowledging that "international planning of iron and steel is the key to economic unity," the document goes on to say that "nothing less than public ownership can insure this fully" and planning will be "worse than useless" if it is inspired by private profit. Unity, in other words, can be tolerated only among Socialists, not among Europeans. Unity under any other auspices is, according to Minister of War John Strachey, "bogus internationalism," a plot to get power by the people's enemies, namely, the capitalists.

Now this is a far cry from the pre-label days of Pope: that which is best administered is best. But it is a modern fact of which American policy-makers must take cognizance. Not that the English Conservatives are much different, in spite of the recent Conservative motion of condemnation of the Labor government for its nonparticipation in the Schuman conference. This was merely a party maneuver meaning very little. It has been said that if the Conservatives had been in power, their reaction would have been the same, but for different reasons. They would have kept away from the Schuman conference because the ticket of admittance was a prior willingness to sacrifice a fraction of their sovereignty, and they feel that this would mean a sacrifice of Britain's world position. They want freedom of action. So both the Tories and the Laborites, despite the noble words of both Mr. Attlee and Mr. Churchill on European unity, are pretty much in basic agreement. They are prepared to cooperate, but not to merge.

It is a good thing that the air has thus been cleared. Policy from this side of the Atlantic can be conducted with greater intelligence if these realities are recognized and pondered. The United States in the matter of the Schuman Plan should be concerned primarily in helping Germany and France to bury the hatchet in precisely the manner outlined in the Schuman initiative. They should be urged to go it alone. If there are obstructions, the United States can offset them, and should be prepared to do so. Anything short of a merge would be the same kind of prewar cartel which in prewar days increased rather than buried conflict.

Moscow Line

The official Communist Party line on Korea, to be parroted by every leader of the faithful throughout the world, has been laid down from on high by Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister. The gist of it is this: that the fighting in Korea constitutes no more than a civil war in which the brave men of the north, having been attacked by the depraved minions of Wall Street in the south, are now trying to preserve the union; that "the intrusion of the American forces into Korea represents an open war against the Korean people"; that the United States subverted the Security Council of the United Nations in an effort "to deprive Korea of national independence . . . and to use Korean territory as a military base in the Far East." How largely this line will be swallowed depends on the intellectual nourishment available to the people to whom it is being fed.

In order to accept it, you must first of all believe that the Soviet Union has no more authority over North Korea than over, say, Patagonia or Ecuador. Second, you must disbelieve all the independent and competing news sources which uniformly reported that the "civil war" began with a North Korean invasion of South Korea; you must also disbelieve all the subsequent reports from the battlefront, including reports from Communist sources, which indicate that all the fighting is well below the thirty-eighth parallel; indeed, you must even disbelieve Mr. Gromyko himself, at least in part. For he speaks at one point of "a provocative attack of the troops of the South Korean authorities on border areas of the Korean People's Democratic Republic"; and at another point of the right of the Koreans to unify "the South and the North of Korea into one state," asserting that this is the same right as that "used by the North Americans in the sixties of the last century, when they unified the South and the North of America into one national state."

It may be that Mr. Gromyko presented this last analogy in a hurry without much chance to bone up on his American history. The way we have always heard it the Civil War here started over a rupture of the Union and was waged, on the part of the South, for independence. The aim of the North was not conquest of a neighboring sovereign state but preservation of a Union which had been in existence for the better part of a hundred years. In Korea, the only legal government, recognized by more than 30 other nations and approved by an overwhelming majority of the U. N. General Assembly, is the government in the South, now being invaded from the north. The government of the South is the Republic of Korea, just as, in the American Civil War situation, the government of the north was the United States of America. But these aspects of the analogy probably escaped Mr. Gromyko. They may be missed by many innocent people all over the world unless a diet of fact is offered to them in place of the Soviet synthetics.

Potato Bugs

In what must be a new high even for the Kremlin's brand of poppycock, Russia has formally charged the United States with dropping potato bugs by airplane over eastern Germany to destroy the potato crop. Actually, as we remarked last month, this is a propaganda smoke screen to cover a crop failure in the Eastern German satellite and is in reality tacit acknowledgment that in a people's democracy the weather is about the only thing that remains uncontrolled. In any event, the East German government was not too proud to avail itself of American generosity and buy 100 pounds of surplus potatoes at 1 cent a hundred pounds—a deal disclosed after the supposed incidents took place. At this stage it is a fair bet that there are more surplus potatoes than bugs. Aside from the untried expedient of dropping the potatoes themselves by air to get rid of them, we should think that if the Government could contrive to corral any bugs it would turn them loose on the tons of surplus spuds now being dyed blue and destroyed. Who knows but what that would make the potato bugs fat and insolent enough to answer the Kremlin themselves?

Containing Communism

It is probably true that the United States stand with regard to Korea may not have been anticipated by Russia. However, we should not feel that the Soviet regime will in any way reverse its attitude.

Moscow's aim is still to weaken this country economically. A series of incidents—Berlin, Austria, Iran, Yugoslavia and other sectors where the Communists have made their presence felt, could readily place us in a dangerous position.

United States intervention and assistance physically to prevent the spread of communism as we have done in Korea would be a big strain on our national resources. Russia, in the meantime, would remain in the background, prodding her satellites and continually propagandizing about American war mongering.

Carrying on a war of this nature would eventually require rationing and other controlling measures. How would the American people react? Today everyone is unanimously behind the President and his policy. What would be the reaction once the resulting effects were felt personally—conscription, casualty lists, points for meat, curtailment of nonessential production, cigarette shortages and many other inconveniences and controls, some of which are still with us?

Hume's Commentary

I am sure that your music critic, Paul Hume, is too familiar with the stuffy brand of antagonism which his opera commentary aroused in a letter published June 28 to give it much thought. My friends and I, however, are deeply concerned. According to your correspondent, our sensibilities must be duller than we had imagined them to be. He implies that Hume's only fans were giggling teen-agers and that Hume's humor was in low taste, offensive to the true lovers of opera.

Now there is not one in our Watergate-attending circle who cannot remember the Wilson administration, and all of us are abundantly familiar with both libretto and score of each opera which San Carlo Company had to offer. But we thought Hume was magnficent, and, if it is not impolite to the charming ladies of the company to say so, we attended one or two performances of the more tried works only because of his freshening influence on the repertoire.

It seems to me that the people who are scandalized by Hume's approach are, for the most part, too unfamiliar with foreign languages to appreciate his brilliant technique of translating from idiom to idiom, rather than from word to word. Hume's methodology would be impossible if it were not backed by the most comprehensive knowledge of the field. He makes his erudition extremely pleasant to the old hands as well as to the novices. Much as we enjoyed your June 25 article on him, we take issue with one statement in it: We would gladly trade in Cross on Hume, any Saturday afternoon!

Unequal Justice

I believe our motto, as a country, is "equal justice under law." Reflecting on this, I could not help comparing the punishment meted out in two rather recent cases of infraction of the law.

A man carelessly runs down another on the street, and the victim dies of his injuries. The driver, of course, did not deliberately kill the victim, but through what may well be called criminal negligence caused his death. The driver was fined $5.

A hungry man, early one morning, in lieu of breakfast for which he has no money, appropriates two cup cakes from a counter. He is fined $1 for the theft of two 5-cent cup cakes, and as he naturally cannot pay the fine, is sentenced to two days in jail.

What is the conclusion? That a man's life is worth $5, or five times as much as two cup cakes? And where is the "equal justice" in this procedure?

Cab Fares

In the hearings on raising the Capitol Transit fares, the Public Utilities Commission went into considerable detail as to the firm's cost of operation and what a proper rate of return should be. However, in the recent rezoning of the southeast area of the city for taxicabs, which was tantamount to a decrease in taxi rates, no hearings were held and no effort was made to reconcile the costs of taxicab operation with the change in rates.

What is the reason for this rank discrimination on the part of the PUC? This body is supposed to take an objective view in setting utility rates. Yet for the past 10 years it has done nothing to adjust taxi rates against the rising costs of operation.

With the new increase in Capital Transit fares, there will be only five cents difference in the cab fares and the transit rates for 2 or more people taking a cab in the downdown area.

The PUC has at its disposal ample information on the costs of taxicab operation in the District of Columbia. Many cab drivers have kept accurate manifests for years and would be glad to supply any needed information.

The zone rates should be gone over in an effort to reconcile costs of operation with the fares. If the long zone rides and long intrazone riders were eliminated, the cab driver could get a proper rate of return.

U. N. Direction

If, as he states, President Truman is acting "under the United Nations," why is the Korean campaign not placed under the direction of the United Nations? The governments of other countries which responded to Lie's call for volunteers did not presume to direct their movements. As long as President Truman remains the commander-in-chief of the campaign, it appears that the United Nations is under him.

There is no doubt that most of the governments represented on the Security Council, which voted for action, wish to avoid a world war. There is one member who would welcome it — the representative of Chiang-Kai-shek, who represents neither the people nor the government of China. The great majority of the world's people and their governments desire peace. They would reasonably have more confidence in the peaceful intentions of the United Nations and its Secretary-General, Trygve Lie, than in those of President Truman.

"Eyes And Ears"

As a former naval intelligence officer (of some 18 years' service) I should like to commend you for your editorial of June 27, "Eyes and Ears." As you say, a "shakeup of CIA is overdue," but in defense of CIA I would like to quote from one of the better naval intelligence officers (not, incidentally, Admiral Zacharias) who was attached to CIA and said to me that "no matter how excellent intelligence may be, it is valueless unless 'operations' acts on what is provided them in the way of intelligence." The one who spoke was in a position to know because he was in a critical intelligence assignment on December 7, 1941, and I was the intelligence duty officer.

Drew Pearson's column of June 29 refers indiscriminately to counter-espionage and espionage. The former is the province of the FBI, the latter of CIA and the intelligence organizations of Army, Navy, and, now, I suppose, Air Force.

Too much attention has always been given to the "flat-footing" of counter-intelligence and too little to the gathering of what we refer to as "positive intelligence" of possible enemy intentions, resources, etc., etc. While I was responsible for intelligence on something like eight countries of Europe—and might be called upon for detailed information upon which to base an invasion or a large-scale raid—I had a maximum of 27 assistants, both naval and civilian. Meanwhile, one section of counter-intelligence had 45 officers who could attend daily movies.

We have read and listened to all kinds of tales of what naval intelligence did. Most of those involve the illegal breaking-in of private dwellings and such unorthodox methods. To obtain intelligence they may be perfectly lawful (if one gets away with it). I have always been an advocate of a central intelligence organization, but the bounds between the FBI and such a unit must be well defined and concentration must be upon the gathering of enemy intelligence—not their operatives. Is not this, perhaps, the weakness in our present Central Intelligence Agency?

Tree Farms

John E. Berry of Minneapolis, writes in his July 1 letter of the widespread devastation of Minnesota's northern forest lands. It appears either that Mr. Berry's forestry education is not complete or Dr. Raphael Zon's is not. Dr. Zon, who until he retired a few years ago was director of the Lake States Forest Experiment Station at St. Paul, Minn., writes in the November, 1949, Journal of Forestry as follows:

"In my own lifetime I observed a region, the Lake States, which a quarter-century ago was considered 'doomed' as a timber producing region because its valuable white and red pines were largely gone; today it is supporting a growing pulp and paper industry having a larger capital investment and a longer payroll than the sawmills of the booming days of the lumber industry. The base of this new industry is the lowly jack pine and the humble aspen which a couple of decades ago were considered almost worthless."

And why go to Europe to learn about tree farms? The forest industry-sponsored tree farm program began here in 1941. Today, nine years later, there are 2244 organized tree farms in 27 States covering 20,096,769 acres!

Home Forces Mobilize

By Malvina Lindsay

Divided Front

(Scene—A meeting of the Association for Advancement.)

CHAIRMAN—This meeting has been called to consider what we should do about the Korean crisis.

Mr. Cavil—Do you realize who's to blame——

Mrs. Feddup—I'm going to scream!

Mr. Fort—Mr. Chairman, let's be realistic. This may be war! We must get on with our civilian defense plans. We'll need fire fighters, technicians, bigger blood banks, nurses, doctors——

Mrs. Montclair St. Vitus—And uniforms! We should see some topflight designers at once.

Mrs. Cache—What about laying in some nylons—I mean some goods?

Mr. Dare—As president of Atomic Age Citizens, Inc., I protest this approach. We're assuming World War III has started.

Mr. Shellback—We've got to be realistic.

Mrs. Feddup—I'm going to scream!

Mr. Dare—That's just it! I'm realistic enough to know we're dodging the hard part of the job that faces us—the mobilization of our minds and spirits for a sacrifice and an offensive that might prevent a major war.

MR. CAVIL—That's high falutin' talk.

Mr. Stepp—Are you insinuating he went to college?

Mrs. McAddle—Who is it that's a Communist?

Chairman—Order, please.

Mrs. March—I'm sure we'll all be ready to do our part in the civilian defense plans that I understand will be announced September 1. But I agree with Mr. Dare that we face something harder now, namely a challenge to grow up—and to do it quickly. In the last 10 days our Nation and ourselves have become years older. We now realize, as we had not been willing to do before, what great permanent responsibilities we will shoulder around the globe the rest of our lives—whether the war be cold or hot.

Mr. Cavil—Who's to blame for getting us into all this?

Mrs. Feddup—I'm screaming——

Chairman—Order! Mr. Nesselrode Groove, civic leader, has a message.

Mr. Groove—We should appoint a committee to study the Korean situation carefully and report back—at our fall meeting.

Mr. Dare—I demand that we stop trying to escape our present obligations by talking about the bandages we will roll or the fires we will put out should a war strike us. There are things to do now. We've got to put more strength behind democratic forces in soft spots around the globe. That's going to take money. So first of all we'd better stop howling for tax reduction and for life as usual.

Mr. Trumpet—That sounds subversive——

Mr. Shellback—It's unrealistic—with an election coming up.

Mr. Stepp—If we had a hot war on, we'd have a lot more subversive threats at our pocketbooks.

MRS. MARCH—We've got to realize the Korean attack is a milestone in our life as a Nation. We now enter on a time when we have to be more expendable, hence stronger physically and morally.

Mr. Fort—Now you're talking sense, except for the—the——

Mrs. March—You mean the moral end of it?

Mr. Fort—I didn't exactly say that——

Mrs. McAddle—Who did he say was immoral?

Chairman—Order!

Mr. Dare—Another immediate step we can take is to throw our weight behind this movement in Congress to strengthen the exposition of our democratic faith. I mean the Marshall Plan of Ideas. Unless we win allies for the beliefs we're defending, we'll find ourselves out on a limb—fighting alone on fronts all over the world.

Judge Pudd—Where's the money coming from?

Mrs. Feddup—I feel a screaming fit——

Mr. Dare—Of coure it'll cost money—but a trifle compared to what we put out for bombs and planes. Why is it we never object to the cost of a weapon that'll murder or maim human beings, but always whine when money's spent on a weapon to change men's ideas, perhaps save their lives?

Judge Pudd—I like to see where my money goes.

Mrs. March—I want to depend for my defense on something besides steel and dynamite. Robots may guide planes, drop bombs, but they don't give me security. No matter how many pushbuttons in war we get, it's the human being who sets them off that counts. This is a time when we should be asking ourselves what we really believe and why and, what is more, telling people everywhere about it.

Mr. Shellback—All this country needs is more two-fisted Americans——

Mrs. Feddup—I'm screaming NOW!

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Fourth Great Power

WHEN the Korean affair exploded nearly two weeks ago negotiations were underway in Paris on the Schuman Plan, France was without a "government" to replace M. Bidault's and the House of Commons was debating Britain's position on the Schuman Plan. There have been signs of satellite activity in the Balkans directed against Yugoslavia. And of course there has been new anxiety among the Germans caused by their being reminded how civil war can break out in a partitioned country.

Lippmann

ALL IN ALL the developments in Europe and the explosion in Asia combine, it seems to me, to emphasize the importance, indeed the necessity, of making a good, bold, and prompt start with the Schuman Plan—that is to say of going forward with a treaty which lays down the constitutional principles of the new European authority. The European statesmen should be undeterred and uninhibited by the fact that it is not possible now to give a precise answer to every question that may arise in someone's mind. Madison and Hamilton and the Founding Fathers would never have formed a Constitution had they been expected to forecast how all the branches of the Government would deal with all the issues that might be posed under the Constitution.

In an undertaking of this kind the decisive consideration is not the commas and the semicolons of the constitutional treaty but whether there exists the will to work together. The paramount and the essential question is whether France and Germany mean to found a European confederacy. And when one says "France" and "Germany" one means the enlightened vanguard who have seen the vision of a free and peaceful Europe, and will be followed by the great masses of their countrymen if only they put their feet firmly on the road to such a Europe.

THE BRITISH debate, as I read it, proved unmistakably that, apart from a small minority, the leaders of both parties are agreed that Britain will not, cannot, and should not accept full membership in a European union. There were, however, differences of view as to what follows from this British national decision. At least three lines of thought can be discerned. There is Mr. Attlee's which, as he stated it, is like the man himself clear and straightforward. Mr. Attlee pays Mr. Schuman the compliment of believing that Mr. Schuman really intends to found a supra-national European institution. Convinced that Britain should not join it, Mr. Attlee has declined to participate in negotiations to achieve what he has already rejected.

Mr. Attlee's position facilitates, rather than obstructs, the Franco-German effort. It seems to me "different in spirit and in purpose from that of the Dalton manifesto. For while Mr. Attlee's position is nonparticipation without hostility to the Schuman Plan, it is only too plain that there are strong feelings of hostility to the plan among important elements of the Labor Party. The plan has enemies who go beyond a refusal to participate. They wish it to fail, and one must count on their using their influence, which is considerable among the German and the French Socialists, to work against it.

And then there is a third British view which is that Britain should participate in the negotiations—in order to chaperone them, and to see to it that the European union remains platonic. They wish Britain to participate in a negotiation in order that it may prevent the formation of a European union in which Britain could not participate.

FROM THE American point of view Mr. Attlee's position is the most favorable. A British policy of nonparticipation without obstruction would fit well enough with an American policy of nonparticipation with warm encouragement and assistance, if and when and as the French and the Germans jointly ask it.

IT IS NOT too much, I believe, to say that in the Schuman Plan lies Europe's hope of salvation, and not improbably the world's best chance of avoiding a global war. The fatal instability since 1945 is in France, in Germany, and in their relations. A partitioned Germany, half satellite and half client, has no decent and peaceable future. France is too small and is too weak to police a restless and a revengeful Germany and also to defend Europe. The instability of French governments, and the deep divisions within the nation may have their roots in the basic fact that France is too small for its European responsibilities and too small to play its necessary part in a world where the Soviet Union, the United States, and the British Commonwealth are the three leading powers.

The fourth great power cannot be France alone. In the atomic age it cannot be Germany alone, even a united Germany. The fourth great power, which is waiting to be born, is the Commonwealth of Europe. It will be born when France and Germany have formed a lasting partnership. For to this nucleus there will adhere the surrounding continental countries that are free to do so. The others will know where they can go when they are free again.

THEN THERE will exist a Europe strong enough to be independent and to be free. Because the European commonwealth opens up to the people of Europe the prospect not only of material improvement but of their own greatness and of their historic mission, it will provide a great reason for their loyalty. So Europe will be defended from within against the fatal disaffections and despairs of the Europeans themselves.

But the European commonwealth will also be guaranteed, supported, and defended by the whole Atlantic community of which a free Europe is by its history, its geography, its culture and its interests a part, indeed the original part. This commonwealth, with its loyalties settled within and its allies pledged without, would not invite or readily permit an attack from the Asiatic mainland.

A Communication

Farce Of The Soviet 'Unanimous' Budget

By Dr. Lazar Volin

Regional Specialist, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.

(The views expressed in this communication are Dr. Volin's, and not necessarily those of the Department of Agriculture.)

THE WORLD was recently treated to an important piece of news from Moscow, namely—the budget of the USSR was discussed and enthusiastically passed by Stalin's Supreme Soviet, "elected" on a single party ticket by a majority of only a little over 99 percent of the voters.

The comedy was staged exactly as in the preceding years. The Minister of Finance introduced the budget with a speech which filled two pages of Pravda, but revealed only such facts and figures as was deemed safe for the theoretically powerful parliament to hear.

Just try to find in the budget such an important item as the expenditures and revenues of the Soviet slave labor camps. But you will find in the Minister's report the usual canard about Soviet pacifism vs. American militarism, allegedly demonstrated by the higher proportion of expenditures for national defense in the United States budget compared with that of the USSR—a preposterous claim.

Other acts of the show followed their ordained course. The usual speeches of the deputies adhered to a certain pattern with but little deviation, echoing the current party line. They began and ended invariably by singing the praises of Stalin. Thus, in the first sentence of his speech, Deputy Grechukha refers to the "wise guidance of our leader and teacher—the great Stalin," and at the end again speaks of "our beloved leader and teacher, the great Stalin." Deputy Kovalenko begins his speech by referring to "the great and beloved leader comrade Stalin," and ends by "long live our beloved leader and teacher, the great Stalin." And so on ad nauseam.

Occasionally the deputies give a few facts and figures of propaganda value respecting their districts or ministries, voice a few complaints or criticize mildly some government agency or group of agencies, and meekly request some additional appropriations. The whole performance never rises above the level of a mediocre farce.

BUT THERE are, of course, a good many who will ask, was it ever different in Russia? Was the budget ever debated in public under the Czars? Yes, the budget was thoroughly debated in the State Duma, or parliament, during the early years of the present century. It is true that, after a constitution was wrested from the Czar in 1905, the reactionary government did all it could to produce an obedient parliament. The czarist government practically succeeded in this objective after the dissolution of the first two overwhelmingly progressive Dumas in 1906-07 and introduction of restrictive changes in the electoral law and procedure. Even the powers of such a parliament were narrowly limited. Nevertheless, there was still a liberal and radical opposition in the Duma, including even Bolsheviks.

The opposition parties mustered much oratorical talent and knowledge of public affairs which stood them in good stead in the struggle with the government. Of course, the opposition was as a rule outvoted in the Duma, but it could speak its mind and use the parliamentary rostrum to criticize the reactionary government. The opposition performed this mission well; so well, indeed, that it contributed much to the discrediting of the czarist regime in the eyes of the public, which hastened its eventual downfall.

The annual budget debates in the Duma presented a heavensent opportunity for the critical review of government policies and actions, and the opposition took full advantage of it. This is borne out by the stenographic reports of the Duma sessions, which are available in the Library of Congress.

IF WE take, for instance, a year like 1913 (it could just as well be 1912 or 1914), we find that immediately after the Minister of Finance had finished his budget speech, the liberal Deputy Shingarev, his chief Duma critic, began the long debate by censuring the administration for the limitation of the budgetary powers of the Duma. Shingarev was followed by other critics of the government who spoke in the same vein or even more sharply.

After the general budget debate, appropriations for different departments of the government were also debated at length, and here again the opposition had an opportunity to rake the government over the coals. The powerful Ministry of Interior, which administered the police, was especially flayed for abuses of the civil liberties granted by the constitution of 1905.

Can anyone imagine a Soviet deputy today so much as intimating that civil liberties, ostensibly granted by the 1936 constitution of the USSR, were "occasionally" violated by the police? For example, in his concluding remarks during the budget debate in the Duma, in 1913, the liberal Deputy Alexandrov said, "Gentlemen, it is said that each nation deserves the government it has. I don't believe this and consider it a prejudice, a historic falsehood. I think, gentlemen of the State Duma, that the Russian people, the great and strong Russian people, are superior to their government. The present government is not worthy of its people. (Prolonged applause on the Left and some parts of the Left Center; cheers.)"

The very fact that such words could be safely uttered 37 years ago in the Duma—and they were by no means exceptional—while anything of the sort is simply unthinkable in Russia today, points up the deep degradation of the political life in that country. But by the same token it offers historical ground for hope that what was once lost may some day be more than regained.

Tydings Group May Report Next Week

Senator Tydings (D., Md.) has called for a meeting of his special Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee for Friday to work out a report on its investigation of communism in the Government.

It was indicated that Tydings, joined by the other Democratic members of the subcommittee, McMahon (Conn.) and Green (R. I.), may have a voluminous report ready to present to the Senate by next week.

That they would be joined in it, however, by the Republican members, Hickenlooper (Iowa) and Lodge (Mass.), seemed almost impossible.

Lodge has taken the position that from the subcommittee's investigation it is not possible to make a finding of guilt or innocence of many of the State Department employes who have been accused of Communist leanings. Hickenlooper, meanwhile, has functioned throughout the subcommittee's four-month history more or less as the advocate of the point of view of Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.), initiator of the charges.

Thus, it would be more than unlikely if they joined with the majority, who feel that none of McCarthy's charges have been proved, and that all of the individuals accused by name are loyal Americans.

At present, the report under preparation is thought of as an "interim" document. It may, however, end as the final report.

Either way, it is known that the report will be an enormous one, of many hundred pages, discussing in detail the charges and answers relating to the dozen or more persons McCarthy discussed by name, and almost a hundred more listed by "case number."

Transcripts of subcommittee's hearings, possibly including all those taken in executive session, may be released along with the report.

Snyder Asks Moderate Rise In Revenue Due to War Costs

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Treasury Secretary John W. Snyder yesterday warned the Senate Finance Committee any "increased disturbance to world peace" would inevitably mean higher taxes.

Opening hearings on the "balanced" House revenue bill, Synder asked Senators to bring it into line with Korean developments by "moderately" increasing its revenue output.

Snyder inferred, however, that even upward revision of the House-passed measure by the billion dollars originally requested by the President may not suffice.

Said Snyder:

"If during the course of your consideration of this legislation it appears that we are confronted with a substantial increase in defense expenditures and strains on the economy, I shall not hesitate to advise you."

Questioned Over Increases

Plainly skeptical of the increased taxes on big corporations already provided in the House bill, Senate Republicans pointedly questioned Snyder about them.

Indications are the corporate rates will have a thorough going-over before the Senate group reports a bill. Thus far the committee hasn't raised its sights above the "approximate balance" in revenue achieved by the House by simply offsetting a billion dollars in excise tax cuts.

Snyder yesterday faintly praised the House measure but reminded the Senators it doesn't raise as much revenue as the President asked and has several other "deficiencies."

"Recent events have underscored the importance of the objectives of the President's program," Snyder stressed.

Subject to Developments

The Senate group, headed by Senator Walter F. George (D., Ga.) meanwhile proceeded with the bill on a "subject to developments" basis. Hearings will resume today and continue through most of next week but Senators were alerted to suspend action at any stage if Korean developments warrant a further change in fiscal policy.

Snyder said he was glad the committee had decided that the bill "could be halted if conditions later indicate it would be unwise to go through with the legislation." Snyder conceded the House measure "makes progress" toward the President's revenue goals but complained that it "does not go the whole way."

Specifically he criticized House failure to reduce the present "excessive" oil and minerals depletion allowance, and to bolster estate and gift taxes.

"Discrimination" Extended

Instead of cutting back percentage depletion, he said the House bill extends this type of tax "discrimination" by granting special tax relief to those who mine such items as sand, gravel, fuller's earth, fire clays, brick and tile clays.

He noted, too, that the House bill failed to implement the President's Point Four program by granting companies which operate foreign branches more liberal tax treatment.

He approved, however, of the House increases in taxes on corporations earnings more than 167 million dollars, and the proposed speedup in corporate tax collections. He indorsed, too, the proposed 10 percent flat withholding tax on dividends.

Committee questioning, however, was highly critical of these three House provisions.

Millikin Needles Snyder

Senator Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.), ranking minority member, gently needled Administration fiscal policies. Millikin blandly asked Snyder when the Treasury last reduced the deficit.

"Year before last," replied Snyder.

"Not during that awful (GOP) Eightieth Congress?" asked Millikin.

"That's right," said Snyder. "You guessed it."

The Treasury Secretary estimated the House bill would involve a revenue loss of 170 million dollars instead of the relatively negligible 12 million dollar loss the House estimated.

Congressional staff experts said they were nonetheless standing on the House estimates. They said the Treasury failed to allow for an estimated 100-million-dollar pickup in income taxes stemming from excise tax cuts. In addition, staff experts estimated the House corporation taxes would yield 433 million dollars. Snyder estimated the new corporate tax yield at only 410 million.

Crime Probers Hear 2 Today

The Senate Crime Investigating Committee will hear two witnesses at an open hearing in the Capitol today.

Due to testify are Gov. Luther Youngdahl of Minnesota and Virgil Peterson of Chicago. Peterson, who is executive director of the Chicago Crime Commission, will speak for the American Municipal Association as well.

Youngdahl is expected to tell of his State's drive on slot machines and other forms of gambling and outline the need for Federal help in breaking up interstate racketeering.

Peterson probably will be questioned about the charges of his crime committee that an organized syndicate controls racketeering in America today.

During the race-wire bill hearings of the Senate Commerce Committee, one witness traced to Peterson many estimates on the amount of the gamblers' annual take and other similar headline-making charges, an attorney for Continental Press, suggested that Peterson be asked if the Chicago Crime Commission "ever received any contributions from the Thoroughbred Racing Association or Thoroughbred Protective Association. . . ."

Open hearings are scheduled by the Senators in Miami on July 13 and 14. These hearings are expected to develop interstate crime links between Florida and New York, Illinois, California and other States.

Date to Be Set July 19 In Remington's Trial

New York, July 5 (AP).—A date will be set July 19 for the trial of William Remington, former Government economist, who is charged with lying when he denied ever being a Communist.

Federal Judge T. Whitfield Davidson announced the July date after postponing setting a trial time today. Remington pleaded innocent on June 13 to the one-count perjury indictment.

Tax Return Explained by Sen. McCarthy

By Edwin R. Bayley

Milwaukee, July 5—An explanation of the high interest payments with which Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) helped offset his 1949 income was received today by state tax officials.

Tax officials asked Saturday for an explanation of the $15,172.54 in interest payments which McCarthy had reported. The Senator had written "See Attached" on his return, but nothing was attached. He sent in a letter dated July 1 what he said was the carbon copy of his original statement. This part of the report must have been "misplaced," he said.

McCarthy listed three brothers, two sisters, a niece, and six banks and finance companies as the recipients of these interest payments. The highest payment was $9150 to the Appleton (Wis.) State Bank in his home town. Payments to relatives totaled $5354.

Recipients Listed

McCarthy reported interest payments to the following: Howard McCarthy, Appleton (a brother), $2857.70; Steve McCarthy, Appleton (brother), $71.75; William McCarthy, Chicago (brother), $2258; (Mrs.) Helen Hoffman, Appleton (sister), $74; (Mrs.) Olive Kornely, Appleton (sister), $75; Mrs. Elmer Coon, Appleton (niece), $18; Victor McCormick, Green Bay, $97.50; People's Loan & Finance Co., Appleton, $269.92; Thorp Finance Co., Thorp, Wis., $247.50; Outagamie County Bank, Appleton, $8.53; Appleton State Bank, $9150.22; Citizens' State Bank, Shawano, Wis., $19.38; Riggs National Bank, Washington, D. C., $25.04.

Some of McCarthy's relatives were reached for comment. Mrs. Kornely, asked if she received the $75 listed for her, said: "I assume so. If he listed the payment, I must have got it." Mrs. Kornely said she didn't remember when the loan was made nor the amount. She said she had received a note as security.

Howard McCarthy, a real estate dealer and auctioneer, said he couldn't say whether he had received the $2857.70 in interest without checking his books. He said he "couldn't remember" the amount of the loan or when it was made, but that "Joe owes me some money."

No Loan, Niece Emphasizes

Mrs. Coon said she had received $18 from "Uncle Joe," but that it had been an interest payment on $300 that was left to her by her grandfather, Tim McCarthy, the Senator's father. Senator McCarthy was the administrator of his father's estate, she said, Mrs. Coon stated, with emphasis, that the $18 was not interest on a loan to McCarthy, but interest paid on the $300 from the estate.

The Appleton State Bank refused to discuss McCarthy's loan without authorization from the Senator. It appeared that the Senator might have borrowed more than $200,000 from the bank. At 4 percent interest, the loan would have been about $228,000.

There was no indication in McCarthy's income tax return as to the possible use of this money. McCarthy has reported losses, chiefly through interest payments and stock market dealings, that have offset his income so that in the last four years, while earning $66,938, he paid no State income tax.

Hill Speedup Called For July 31 Finish

Senate Administration lieutenants yesterday ordered a speed-up in the legislative program in an effort to recess or adjourn Congress around August 1.

Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (Ill.) said the recess drive can be called off at a moment's notice however, if war developments warrant.

The stepped-up tempo, approved by the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, calls for:

1. Overtime sessions of the Senate Appropriations Committee this weekend in an effort to complete the 30 billion dollar omnibus money bill. The Senate will recess today for the balance of the week so the appropriations group can spend full time on the focal money measure.

FEPC Showdown Seen

2. A session-finale showdown on the Administration's fair employment practices bill at 1 p. m. Wednesday. Lucas said a petition to invoke debate-limiting cloture on the key civil rights measure will be filed Monday.

3. Senate action on the single-package appropriation bill after one week of debate, with an effort to limit talk to five minutes per Senator on each amendment.

4. Senate action on the tax bill during the week of July 17.

Leaders conceded a number of major measures, notably the Hawait and Alaskan Statehood bills, might be caught in the session-end jam and left high and dry on the calendar.

Asked about the committee-approved Statehood bills, Lucas said they couldn't be programmed until the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee has filed a formal report.

Lucas said many Senators object to calling up any measures that will run into prolonged debate. He said both the Statehood bills, and the Mundt anti-Communist bill, may involve "a tremenddous lot of talk."

Whether or not they prolong the session, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) called on Lucas to program both on the Statehood bills. He said committee reports on both of them will be filed next week.

O'Mahoney said Statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska are of more than ordinary importance in the light of Far Eastern developments.

Russia Claimed Alaska

He noted that Alaska is only 3500 miles from Korea and that Soviet Russia only recently contended the Territory was illegally purchased from the Imperial Russian government. Statehood for Hawaii, O'Mahoney said, would have a tremendous strategic impact in the whole Pacific area.

Senate Republicans had a policy meeting of their own later in the day, but Chairman Robert A. Taft (Ohio) offered no major objections to the Democratic adjournment drive.

Taft said some Republicans wanted to take up the Mundt anti-Communist bills and some others wanted to call up the Statehood bills, but the group did not decide to push any specific legislation.

The Senate GOP steersman even indicated he would cooperate with Lucas' effort to limit debate on the omnibus apropriation bill.

The group further decided not to take a party stand on the nomination of Sumner T. Pike to another term on the Atomic Energy Commission.

Under the revised Democratic leadership program, the Senate would open debate on the omnibus appropriation bill immediately after the Senate votes at 3 p. m. Monday on the Pike nomination.

The decision to file a cloture petition Monday on the FEPC bill, and go to a showdown vote Wednesday, was originally announced a month ago after Southern Democrats blocked an earlier attempt to bring the bill to vote. Wednesday's vote is largely for record-making purposes, since the Southerners apparently again have the votes to block cloture.

Nats Punch It Out With Bosox, Take 9-7 Decision

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

BOSTON, JULY 5.—The unhappiest of all the Red Sox fans came to town today from the nearby fishing village of Gloucester and honorably discharged a vow by pushing a mackerel up Commonwealth ave. with his nose.

He was Joe Capillo, a worker in an oilskin factory who back in April displayed his faith in the Red Sox by predicting that they'd be leading the league on July 4 or else, he added in his letter to the editor of the Boston Post, "I'll bring my own mackerel to town and push it up Commonwealth with my schnozz."

POVICH

It was a completely dead mackerel they finally gave Capillo to work with, as lifeless as his beloved Red Sox have been on occasions this year. Were it a moonlight operation instead of a high-noon show it might have been more fitting inasmuch as the mackerel, like the Red Sox, might then shine and stink and stink and shine.

The Gloucester man's exploit was duly recorded by a detachment of the 41-man brigade of the Boston press which make the Red Sox and their doings the most-covered outfit in baseball, and unlike the Boston players Capillo imposed no 30-minute cooling off period before he could be interviewed by the newsmen.

IF THE RED SOX'S fourth place status is disappointing to Boston fans, they can get some comfort out of the comparative standings a year ago when the Sox were even farther back in the race; yet moved up to fight the Yankees for the pennant on the last day of the season.

One year ago the Red Sox were 12 games behind the league leading Yanks. Now they're 6½ games off the pace being set by the Tigers. They've won six more games than at this point in 1949, lost four fewer. They don't have as much ground to make up, and more to work with. General Manager Joe Cronin was saying in his Fenway Park office today "I figure we will still get home in front."

For Washington fans the interesting situation is that the Red Sox are now tying their hopes in large measure to the pitching of Walt Masterson, the erstwhile ne'er-do-well right-hander of the Nats. Masterson, a flop as a relief man, has turned in three beauts in his last three starting assignments and both Cronin and Manager Steve O'Neill view him as the potential big man of their staff.

THUS FAR the Red Sox have been the mystery club with their failure to step out and take the lead with all that meat and potatoes in the batting department. For most of the season they've had a solid array of .300 hitters and a month ago six of 'em were hitting better than .330, but until their recent seven-game spurt under new Manager O'Neill they've been misfiring sadly.

Their severest critics here declare the Red Sox with a few exceptions don't show the famed hustle that Cronin used to take on the field with him. "Too many of 'em are making too much money," declared one observer bluntly. "I can name six of the Red Sox who are making $30,000 or more for the season. They're not as hungry and eager as some of the other clubs in the league."

He went on to show its effect on their play. "What does a World Series and a $6000 check mean to wealthy players like many of the Red Sox? Some of the guys in this league making $10,000 or less would crash their heads through the walls if they thought they could get a shot at the World Series dough. Tom Yawkey's generosity in the payroll department might not have helped his team."

IF THE RED SOX don't win the pennant, the story persists that Cronin and Yawkey will lose patience with some of their supposedly-talented help, and unload in a flurry of deals this winter. Vern Stephens is the player most often mentioned as trading material, and Ted Williams' name is also heard. But the Sox are trading Williams to nobody.

One of the visiting Philadelphia Athletics' coaches yesterday doubted that Stephens, for all his total of runs batted in, was indispensible to the Red Sox. "They can get better shortstops," he said cryptically.

He pointed Stephens out as the Sox were taking batting practice. "There's the greatest foul ball hitter in the league," he said. "He pulls 50 home run drive just a few feet outside the foul line pole when all he needs is a bat two ounces heavier. He wouldn't get it around as fast and those balls would be fair instead of foul. He's wasting his power."

Shotton Snubs Cards Pitchers In Picking N. L. All-Star Staff

New York, July 5 (AP).—The National League will attempt to break the Americans' All-Star monopoly next Tuesday without the help of St. Louis Cardinal pitchers.

Manager Burt Shotton made that certain today when he failed to name a single Redbird among his eight all-star hurlers. Baseball men consider this a surprising move since they attribute the Cards' current first place position to the splendid work of their pitchers.

Shotton named two of his own Brooklyn aces—Don Newcombe and Preacher Roe. The others are Robin Roberts and Jim Konstanty of Philadelphia, Warren Spahn of Boston; Bob Rush of Chicago; Ewell Blackwell of Cincinnati and Larry Jansen of New York.

Lanier Has 8-2 Record

The omission of St. Louis southpaws Max Lanier and Howie Pollet caused some eyebrow raising, especially since Shotton has only two lefties on his staff—Spahn and Roe. Lanier, who has won eight of 10 decisions, owns a better mark than any of the All-Star eight can boast. Pollet, with eight triumph, is a veteran of All Star competition with three under his belt.

Shotton had no say in his starting lineup which was picked for him by the fans. If Shotton ignored the Cards, the fans certainly didn't. They named Stan Musial for first base, Marty Marion for shortstop and Enos Slaughter for one of the outfield positions. In addition, Red Shoendienst picked up enough votes to be named as an alternate for second base.

Shotton rounded out the 25-man squad with:

Infielders—Gil Hodges and Peewee Reese, Brooklyn, and Eddie Stanky, New York.

Outfielders—Andy Pafko, Chicago; Duke Snider, Brooklyn; Johnny Wyrostek, Cincinnati; and Dick Sisler, Philadelphia.

Catcher—Walker Cooper, Boston.

Tigers Lace Browns, 6-1; Houtteman Wins No. 11

Detroit, July 5 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers stayed four games ahead in the American League race by trimming the St. Louis Browns tonight, 6 to 1. Art Houtteman gave the Brownies nine hits as he posted his eleventh victory against five defeats.

The triumph was the eighth for the Tigers in nine games with the Browns this season.

Ned Garver, who suffered his eighth setback to go with six wins, gave up only two more hits than Houtteman but the Tigers made theirs count with men on the bases.

The Tigers nicked Garver for a run in the first inning on two singles and another pair of singles in the third brought another run.

Four more singles meant three more runs for the Tigers in the fourth with Johnny Lipon and Vic Wertz furnishing the payoff blows.

Don Kolloway's inside-the-park homer to deep center, his fourth of the season, provided the final Detroit run in the fifth.

The Browns got their lone tally in the sixth on successive singles by Jim Delsing and Dick Kokos and a double by Ray Coleman.

Lemon Wins 11th, 8-3; Eddie Robinson Homers

Cleveland, July 5 (AP).—Pitcher Bob Lemon, of Cleveland, given a five-run advantage in the first inning, defeating the Chicago White Sox tonight, 8 to 3.

Lemon allowed nine scattered hits, including home runs by Dave Philley and Eddie Robinson, but marked up his eleventh win of the season.

For Lemon, the game meant his first victory over Chicago this season, the only team in the American League he hadn't beaten. A crowd of 23,006 watched him do it.

Chicago Pitcher Billy Pierce had to suffer all the way through that first inning. He was tagged for five hits and two walks. From then on, the White Sox matched Cleveland run for run.

Pierce went out for a pinch hitter in the seventh inning but was charged with his seventh defeat against six victories.

Jim Brink Enters Mid-Atlantic Tennis Tourney

Jim Brink, the Nation's ninth-ranking player, has entered the Middle Atlantic Sectional Tennis Championships opening Saturday at the Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

In the nationals at Forest Hills, N. Y., last year, Brink defeated Vic Seixas, semifinalist in this year's Wimbleton tourney, before he was elminated by champion Pancho Gonzales in a close third-round match.

Gil Hunt, Washington player now on the comeback trail, has also submitted his entry. The veteran was twice ranked ninth in the country before World War II, higher than any other District netman ever reached.

Cards Down Reds, 6-3, for 6th Straight

St. Louis, July 6 (AP).—The league-leading St. Louis Cardinals downed the Cincinnati Reds 5-3 tonight for their sixth straight victory. Rookie Joe Adcock threw a scare into 13,667 fans by driving in all three Cincinnati runs with a ninth-inning homer. Glenn Nelson and Eddie Miller homered for the Cards.

Howard Pollet limited the Reds to seven hits for his ninth triumph in 14 starts. Adcock's homer into the left field seats followed a double by Bob Usher and one of the two walks issued by Pollet.

Nelson's homer, his first this year as a major leaguer, featured a four-run splurge that knocked out Ken Raffensberger, the loser, in the second. The uprising included a double by Red Schoendienst and singles by Johnny Lindell, Enos Slaughter, Pollet and Tommy Glavlano.

Miller, who went in for Marty Marion when the latter's chronic back ailment acted up, hit his homer in the eighth.

DeWitt Silenced On Browns-to-Baltimore Talk

New York, July 5 (AP).—Commissioner A. B. Chandler has ordered St. Louis Browns' officials to stop talking about moving their franchise to a minor league city.

Frank J. (Shag) Shaughnessy, president of the International League, said today that Chandler, acting on his complaint, told Bill DeWitt of the Browns, that talk about moving his club "is nurting attendance in the minor leagues."

"Sure, I protested against DeWitt's actions," stormed Shaughnessy "why not? DeWitt had no right to pop off the way he did. All that talk about moving the Browns to Baltimore has cut down attendance considerably in that city. Fans are of the mistaken opinion that the present ownership is blocking a movement to Baltimore."

Service Game Off

The Quantico-Bolling Field baseball game, scheduled last night at Griffith Stadium, was postponed indefinitely because of rain.

Jockey's Heroism Saves Rival Rider, Costs Him Victory

CHICAGO, JULY 5 (AP).—Jockey Kenneth Church was commended by the Illinois Racing Board today for an act of heroism which may have cost him victory in the third race at Arlington Park.

By his action Church, a Windsor, Canada, lad probably saved fellow Jockey Wendell Eads from death or serious injury.

Shortly after the break in the third race, Eads, aboard Trier, lost his stirrup and was at the point of falling when Church, seeing his predicament, spurted up alongside and pulled him back into the saddle. He rode along until Eads regained control of his mount.

Church was riding Hair Stylist, the favorite. After his rescue of Eads he went after the leaders, but the race went to Ferry Pilot. Hair Stylist finished second by a length.

The cheers of the crowd were deafening when Church came back to salute the judges and dismount.

Joseph Broderick, secretary of the racing board, said the board will honor Church with a scroll.

69 for Locke, 73 for Bulla

Lees Has 2-Under-Par 68 To Lead British Open Field

Troon, Scotland, July 5 (AP).—Arthur Lees, a stubby little golfer with a bulging waist line, smothered par and the efforts of 92 other shot makers today to take the first round lead in the British Open golf championship with a 68.

That's 2 under par and 5 strokes better than John Bulla, curly-haired pro from Pittsburgh, and Jim McHale of Philadelphia, leaders of the four-man United States brigade.

Frank Stranahan, Toledo, Ohio, had all kinds of trouble and skied to a 77 while Art Clark, the golfing farmer from Huntington, W. Va., fired a 74.

In fact, only two other golfers besides Lees broke par on the 6583-yard old Troon course where the regulation figures are 35-35—70.

One was defending champion Bobby Locke of South Africa, whose performance confirmed him as the short-priced favorite to win the cup again. The other was E. E. Whitcomb, a British pro.

Sam King, like Lees a British Ryder Cup player, stood alone in fourth place with a par 70.

Except for Locke, British pros held all the first nine places. Five Britons shot 71—Dai Rees, Norman Sutton, Hector Thomson, Fred Bullock and W. J. Branch.

Bulla was playing with a catch in his left shoulder which made him flinch almost every time he tried a full swing. He had slept in a cramped position last night and couldn't work the kink out.

He had more than one golfer's share of bad luck to go with it. Johnny hit a beautiful drive on the seventh—and found the ball deep in a divot cut. From there, it buried itself in a bunker with only the top showing. Bulla still got his par, with a fine blast and an 18-foot putt.

McHale, hewing close to par, could have been the best of the Americans but he three-putted the last three greens.

Kiner's Homer Whips Cubs, 4-1

Chicago, July 5 (AP).—Ralph Kiner and Mel Queen teamed today to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs. It snapped a six-game losing streak for the Bucs.

Kiner smashed his twenty-second homer with Dale Coogan aboard in the fourth inning.

Boston, July 5 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox tonight recalled two pitchers from farm clubs and let four others go.

The club recalled righthander Willard Nixon from the Louisville American Association club and lefthander Dick Littlefield from the Birmingham Southern Association team.

The Sox let go pitchers Jim Suchecki, optioned to Louisville; Al Papai, assigned to the St. Louis Cardinals on waiver; Charlie Schanz, assigned to the St. Louis Browns on waiver, and Lefty Earl Johnson, released outright

Phillies Win 2, Gain ½ Game

Philadelphia, July 5 (AP). — The Philadelphia Phillies edged to within one game of the league-leading St. Louis Cardinals tonight, gaining a half game, by taking two from the New York Giants, 9 to 7 and 10 to 3.

The first game was a one-inning affair, completing a game suspended at the end of the eighth two months ago.

Taking no chances, Manager Eddie Sawyer sent his ace pitcher, Robin Roberts, to the mound for the ninth and Roberts set down the Giants one-two-three to preserve the victory for Jim Konstanty, his sixth of the year.

The Phils never trailed in the regularly scheduled game, jumping on Clint Hartung for two runs in the first and adding a pair in the third.

Yanks Romp; Joost Hurt, Out for Month

New York, July 5 (AP).—The New York Yankees outlasted the Philadelphia Athletics, 12-8, today with Cliff Mapes and Billy Johnson the offensive standouts. Mapes drove in five runs on a homer and single and Johnson weighed in with four hits.

Eddie Joost, A's shortstop, sustained severely torn ligaments in his left knee in a collision at second base with Cliff Mapes, big Yankee outfielder, in the seventh inning.

He was carried from the field on a stretcher and, after an examination by Dr. Sidney Gaynor, Yankee physician, was removed to Lenox Hill Hospital for X-rays and further examination. He probably will be sidelined at least a month.

The Yankees banged three Athletic hurlers for 13 hits, with Alex Kellner taking the loss.

Tommy Byrne received credit for his ninth victory against three losses, even though he left in the sixth inning.

Byrne issued six walks and hit four batters before being removed in favor of Joe Ostrowski. The four hit batsmen by one pitcher tied the modern major league record, which is shared by six other hurlers.

AT CHARLES TOWN.

DEAR FOLKS:

Merle Beard of Hagerstown's official family, was a visitor and reports work on the new Hub City racing plant under way. He denied rumors that when the old stand was demolished, workmen found three British soldiers who went in hiding during the Revolutionary War. Looks as if the 3-year-old championship will become a scrambled affair before the year is put what with the likes of Post Card whipping Middleground. Mrs. G. A. Saportas, jr., has taken over the Saggy Farm's Sagagal to train. The most promising apprentice jockey here is young Doyle Gardner. He's strictly business and rides like a veteran. Jockey Johnny Tammaro who rolled his weight up to 150 early last winter has reduced 30 pounds, mostly by roadwork, to return to riding. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Track Sloppy

Laurel Halts Races After Third Event

Laurel raceway was forced to cancel last night's program after three races had been run due to the condition of the track. The slim crowd of 2000 had wagered $47,751.

Atlantic McElwyn piloted by Warren Holmes, finished on top in the first race, a 25-conditioned mile trot, going the route in 2:23 and then Calumet Do, handled by Del Insko, pounded through the slop in 2:16 3/5 in the mile trot, 24-conditioned, second race to complete a 4-1 daily double combination that paid $143.40.

The longest price of the shortened program came up in the third race when Tom Lewis took the long way around a six-furlong dash but came home soonest with Lovely Miss in 1:39 2/5. The bay mare paid a staggering $55.80 for $2 after finishing 12 lengths ahead of Gallant Heart driven by Charlie Carter.

The meet which must end by next Thursday, July 13, thus has to race every remaining night to complete its scheduled 20-night meet.

Ballinakill Noses Out Gain A' Foot

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., July 5.—Lee surrendered to Grant here this afternoon.

At least, Jockey Lee Harris appeared to toss off a race to Jockey Patsy Grant. With Gain A'Foot looking all the part of the winner, Harris put up an overconfident finish and Grant took advantage to push Ballinakill into the wire for a head photo decision.

A length and a half away came Make Hay to be third in the field of ten competing in the Columbia Purse, the day's feature.

Ballinakill, owned by W. G. Myers, was the favorite by a slight margin over Joe Paoli's Make Hay and the 5-year-old had a $6 win mutuel. The victor was clocked in .50 2-5 for the about four and one-half furlongs.

The race was a thriller with four horses running head and head most of the way. Sister Leona was first to show in front but she was soon joined by Ballinakill, Make Hay, and Turncoat.

Sister Leona faltered leaving the backstretch as did Turncoat. However, Gain A'Foot rushed up to join the leaders and Jack Madigan also improved position.

Ballinakill, Gain A'Foot and Make Hay came into the stretch as a team. Harris went to the whip on Gain A'Foot and the P. A. Rothfuss' hope responded and took a neck lead. He was holding his advantage in the final drive when Harris appeared to prejudge the finish. Ballinakill then bobbed up to take the chief money.

Jockey J. C. Lauer rode two winners, his first since he lost his apprentice allowance last Saturday. Both successes were on horses owned and trained by W. F. Parks.

Lauer took the first race with Briar Broom, a $4.40 favorite which teamed with Mrs. W. I. Jones' Cedar Brand, a $5.80 shot to produce a $14.60 daily double pay off on the 3 and 1 combination.

The youngster was aboard Dawndale in the seventh race and took the nine-year-old mare to the top after the half and kept her there to bring an $8.40 payoff.

Both favorite and long shot players had their innings. The day's highest mutuel came when L. A. Boroway's Morning Chime surprised by leading all the way to bring a $51.20 pay off. Apprentice Jose Pelaez turned in a neat saddle job.

Lillian Bitters Wins Wrestling Feature

Lillian Bitters defeated Marie Bennett with a back drop after 15½ minutes of the feature wrestling bout last night at Turner's Arena.

In other matches, Ronald Meeker pinned Ted Tortos with a drop kick in 26 minutes, Mike Paidousis threw Harry Armus in 20½ minutes with a body slam, and Tony Cosenza and Steve Gob teamed to win two-out-of-three falls from Jack Curry and Tiny Mills.

Golfer Scores Ace In 17-Over-Par Round

Manchester, Con., July 5 (AP).—Fred Pack of New Haven scored a hole in one today in the Conecticut Junior Golf Championship Tournament at the Manchester Country Club, but didn't qualify.

He aced the 133-yard eighth hole with a No. 8 iron, but wound up with a 44-43—87, 17 strokes above par and four strokes above the highest qualifying score.

Budge Patty, Sedgman Win, Play for Title at Wimbledon

Wimbledon, July 5 (AP).—Debonair Budge Patty and never-say-die Frank Sedgman won the men's singles semifinals in the All-England lawn tennis tournament today before a wildly clapping center court crowd of more than 15,000.

Both men played brilliantly but Sedgman's hectic five set duel with Jaroslav Drobny stood head and shoulders above Patty's always certain triumph over fellow American Vic Seixas.

For the second straight day the amazing 22-year-old top-seeded Sedgman got up off the floor after he had been trampled on and left for dead.

He didn't seem to have even a prayer left as he lost the first two sets in short order to the self-exiled Czech. But this young Australian never has learned the meaning of the word quit and at the end of almost three nerve-wracking hours he came out on top, 3-6, 3-6, 6-3, 7-5, 6-2.

By comparison Patty had a tea party against the drooping Philadelphian, who was still dog-tired from his five-set upset triumph over Eric Sturgess yesterday. Patty won the match, 6—3, 5—7, 6—2, 7—5, and should have taken it in three straight sets.

Sedgman and Patty, a native of Los Angeles who now lives in Paris, will meet over the best of five sets in the final Friday afternoon. (8 a. m. EST.).

While all this was going on, the American Wightman Cup team of Doris Hart, Louise Brough, Mrs. Margaret Osborne Dupont and Mrs. Pat Todd got rid of the rest of the field in the women's singles and will now settle the title among themselves.

Griffs Overcome 5-1 Deficit To Outslug Red Sox, 9-7

a two-bagger against the wall that opened the game and led to a 1-0 lead for the Nats. Michaels flied out and Noren grounded out, but Vernon got Yost home with a single to center.

Then the Red Sox greeted Consuegra violently with a four run inning, that opened with Dom DiMaggio's single to left. Williams singled to right and Stephens singled to center for the first Boston run and then Walt Dropo walloped an enormous three run homer over the left field wall, the ball still in its ascendancy when it left the park and thudded into the high screen atop the fence. It was his nineteenth of the season, and installed the Sox in a 4-1 lead.

They bounced back for another run in the third though when Doerr doubled off the wall in centerfield and scored on Zarilla's double to left to make it 5-1.

Consuegra himself touched off a big fifth inning for the Nats and they didn't desist until they knocked Stobbs from the box, scored six runs and moved into a 7-5 lead. The little Cuban righthander personally got two hits in the inning.

His single to right field started it and Yost got his third straight hit, a single to left. Michaels followed with a single to center that got Consuegra home. Noren lashed a line drive into center and when DiMaggio missed a shoestring catch it bounded away for a triple loaded with two more runs.

Mickey Vernon took up the torch with a two-bagger to left center that scored Noren with the tying run and brought Joe Dobson in. Dobson slipped a third strike past Mele and then ran into trouble. Stewart batted for Ostrowski and singled to center, scoring Vernon with the run that put the Nats in front, 6-5.

But they weren't through. Dente worked Dobson for a walk, and on Evans' fly to Zarilla, Stewart scampered to third. Then it was that Consuegra got his second hit of the inning, legging out a dribbler down the third-base line as Stewart raced homewith the sixth run of the inning.

Consuegra couldn't last out the sixth, and departed with the tying runs on base. They were promptly knocked in by Vern Stephens' single to left off Reliefer Elmer Singleton.

Batts opened the inning with a single to right but was rapidly snuffed out on Pinch Hitter Goodman's double-play grounder to Michaels. Senor Consuegra lost control at that point, walked DiMaggio, pitched a single to Pesky and loaded the bases with a pass to Williams.

Stephens greeted Singleton with the single that made it 7-7, but the Nats limited the damage by trapping Williams between second and third on Stephens' hit and running him down for the third out.

IN SHORT . . . The cheers for big Walt Dropo, new hero of Fenway Park fans, were significantly louder than those that greeted Ted Williams on his first trip to the plate . . . And when Dropo exploded his three-run homer, it moved him past Williams for the League's runs-batted-in honors, 82 to 81 . . . Outfielder Sam Mele got a break from the A. L. schedule makers who brought the Nats into Boston this morning only a few hours after Mrs. Mele gave birth to a daughter in a Boston hospital . . . The best tip-off on the Red Sox power is that Al Zarilla, a .335 hitter, is seventh in the batting order . . . Irv Noren gave Bobby Doerr's smash against the centerfield wall a tremendous battle in the third inning and held it to a double despite the fact both the ball and Noren bounced off the barrier.

Towns, Publinx Champ, Ousted by Alexander, 1 Up

Louisville, Ky., July 5 (AP).—Clarence Alexander, a 24-year-old tire distributor from Raleigh, N. C., knocked defending champion Ken Towns of San Francisco out of the 1950 National Public Links Golf tournament today with a 1-up, fourth-round victory.

Towns, whose close-to-par play had kept him in the driver's seat among the favorites, collapsed on the second nine of his match after taking a 1-up working edge on the front side.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz

Bureaus Adjusting Activities in Interest Of National Defense

In the wake of the Korean crisis—

The Weather Bureau is stepping up its operations at the direction of the Defense Department. Many of its offices here and elsewhere are being placed under security guard. Weather information is about as important as enemy troop movements in fighting a modern war.

Washington's largest industrial establishment, the Naval Gun Factory, is tightening up its security measures. Casual visitors are prohibited and everyone who enters must be cleared in advance. The new rule also applies to the Naval Research Laboratory, the Naval Ordnance Laboratory, and other such sensitive agencies here and nearby.

Commerce's Export Control Office may be rebuilt. This agency has been undergoing one cutback after another for the past several years as supplies and materials became more plentiful. The last layoff went into effect over the weekend. But now, overnight, top Government planners foresee the distinct possibility of controlling the exports of strategic war materials, a job that would be dropped into the lap of the crippled Export Control Office.

CIVIL SERVICE is making plans, too, in event of World War III. If that happens, the commission would suspend its competitive examining program as it now operates, and appointees to Federal jobs would be given "temporary" jobs for the duration. The Murray bill to overhaul Civil Service's hiring practices will be amended to give the President the power to suspend its provisions during national emergencies.

The House-approved general budget bill carries a little-noticed rider under which a Federal official could be jailed if he overspends the budget for his agency as approved by Congress. This amendment is due to be killed, too, along with the Taber-Thomas and Jensen riders that would reduce both budgets and personnel for most agencies. In these uncertain times, the Army, Navy, Air Force, etc., can't estimate how much they'll need to spend a week from now let alone months in advance.

Congress is certain to be asked to appropriate additional funds to enable the Army, Navy, and Air Force to carry on the fighting in Korea. The President's budget for 1951, of course, didn't anticipate the fighting there. In addition, it provided funds for fewer instead of additional civilian employes. Even so, the Taber-Thomas and Jensen riders would have forced an additional reduction of 144,000 civilian jobs in Army, Navy, and Air Force in the next year.

The military agencies have thousands of jobs now handled by uniformed personnel that could be carried on by civilians. The general idea in the minds of officials here is to assign many of the uniformed people on active military duty and to hire civilians to replace them. So, instead of new civilian personnel cuts as proposed by the President and the House, the situation may be reversed and the defense agencies may be hiring instead of firing.

The President has issued an order extending the suspension of the 8-hour law for laborers and mechanics in the Army and Air Force. Employes who work more than 8 hours in any one day are to be paid full time and a half for the overtime.

INTERIOR: These employes here have been given cash awards for worthwhile suggestions: Eldon G. Hayes, Lois R. Powell, Gladys R. Thomas, and Albert J. D'Amico . . . GUN FACTORY: George A. Henderson, master of the gun carriage shop, has retired from the Naval Gun Factory after 47 years of service there. He began his career as a "boy" machinist on July 1, 1903.

CAA: Helen Calvert is the new president of the Civil Aeronautics Club. Other officers are: Kenneth Cornwell, Harold Earp, W. R. Williamson, and Francis Caporale, vice presidents; Weldon Herrington, treasurer; Berlwyn Gardiner, secretary; John Warlick, Jack Teunisson, Helen McAuliffe, Ernest Hensley and George Shrout, directors, and Fred Toombs and John Mosesso, CA Club News.

85 Hired As Firemen Go on 5-Day, 60-Hr. Week

Total of 146 Due To Be Appointed; Action Follows Vote by Congress

District firemen are now on a 5-day, 60-hour week.

Provided for in the appropriation bill now awaiting final action, the new work week was begun July 1 following a congressional resolution adopted last week.

The resolution allows expenditure of budget items approved by both houses of Congress.

Fire Chief Joseph A. Mayhew revealed last night that he had appointed 85 new firemen and promoted 56 others to fill vacancies created by the new work week.

Mayhew plans to appoint a total of 146 new firemen needed to keep the new plan in operation. Previously the department worked on a six-day, 72-hour week.

Because all new vacancies have not been filled some men are still working more than 60 hours. These will be given time off later.

Leaders Enter Protest Against Negro Company

Negro civic leaders yesterday released a letter of protest against formation of a fifth Negro company as part of the expansion plan.

Addressed to the Fire Department, the letter charged that the step furthered segregation. If the move was prompted by the shorter work week, the letter stated, groups backing the 60-hour week should withdraw their support and try to block final approval.

The letter was signed by officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Federation of Civic Associations, the National Council of Negro Women, and the International Ministers' Alliance.

Mayhew said that both white and Negro firemen preferred to remain in separate units. He added that there was no racial quota for either enlistment or promotion.

Although there is no plan for integration being considered at present, Mayhew said segregation in the department "can't hold out much longer." He said it would be "a lot easier" on the fire department if there was no segregation.

Two Airmen Accused of Auto Theft

Two Bolling Air Force Base privates were charged with auto theft yesterday, although both stoutly denied they even had been in the car in question.

The arrest of Pvts. George A. Willaims, 19, and Delbert C. Nicewarner, Jr., 20, early yesterday followed a blockade that didn't block, and a police chase that failed.

Virginia police notified District police shortly after midnight that a stolen car was headed for Highway Bridge. Road blocks were set up on this side of the river, but the car wasn't spotted.

A short time later, a Ninth Precinct scout car sighted the fugitive auto in Northeast Washington and gave chase. The driver of the stolen car sent it speeding through the streets at 70 miles an hour and escaped from the scout car, police said.

A few minutes later, policemen in a patrol wagon saw three servicemen running near 3d st. and Massachusetts ave. se. One man fled but the other two were captured.

Williams and Nicewarner were taken to the Ninth Precinct Stationhouse, where the driver of the scout car that had participated in the chase identified Nicewarner as the man who had been behind the wheel of the stolen car. The third airman is still sought, police said.

The stolen car was found in an alley near 18th st. and Massachusetts ave. se. Property of Lee Schooles of 2958 2d st. se., it was taken a week ago from the 700 block of 17th st. nw.

The two airmen were held in $1500 bond each for action of the grand jury by United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence.

Two New Polio Cases Reported In Prince Georges

Two cases of polio in Prince Georges County were reported by the County Health Department, yesterday, bringing the total to three for the year.

A 20-year-old woman living in the 4700 block of Queens Chapel Terrace, Hyattsville, was reported in George Washington University Hospital. She was stricken on June 11.

In Children's Hospital is a 7-year-old girl, of the 2900 block of 78th ave., District Heights, who became ill on June 30.

The county's first case was reported on June 30.

D. C. Condemns Meat

A freight carload of meat damaged by flood water near Wheeling, W. Va., last week has been condemned as unfit for human consumption, the District Health Department announced yesterday.

America Should Have Its Heroes, Author Paul Green Says, So He Puts 'Supremely Great Man' on Stage in Sesqui Play

Cast Is Told Purpose Of Symphonic Drama At First Rehearsal

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

THE BIG man in the rumpled tan suit, straw hat in hand, leaned back against the apron of the stage to talk about his play, "Faith of Our Fathers."

Drawling his words, Paul Green declared: "As the political fellows say, 'This is a glorious challenge.'"

Seated before him in the George Washington University auditorium were the 127 actors, singers and dancers selected for roles in his Sesquicentennial drama opening August 4 in the new Rock Creek Park amphitheater.

All but a handful of the performers were amateurs about to be launched on their first professional theater experience. They had been drawn from the "little theaters" around Washington and from the drama groups at George Washington, Catholic and Howard Universities.

AS IN his two previous historical pageants, "The Lost Colony"—given each year on North Carolina's Roanoke Island—and "The Common Glory," a yearly event at Williamsburg, Paul Green had selected amateur actors. Like the other two plays "Faith of Our Fathers" is expected to grow into a regional folk drama.

"It will be a wonderful experience for you—this working together," declared the Pulitzer prize-winning playwright. He was on hand for the first rehearsal to explain to the actors what he was trying to say in the play.

"Faith of Our Fathers" picks up the historical story of America where "The Common Glory" stops, he told the actors. George Washington has just resigned his command. Before him is the "tough hard job" of molding a nation.

"I am a fanatic," Green said. "I believe it is important for a play to have a message as well as to entertain. If not the credo of the theater will become as rotten as that of the movies, television and the radio.

"OUR Nation is full of unappreciated heroes. A nation to be great must be great by nature of her heroes.

"Greece was great because of the beautiful, triumphant saga of her heroes. America is young and ought to be busy making heroes."

In "Faith of Our Fathers," Green explained, he had tried to put one "supremely great man on stage." The story flows through the character of George Washington.

"I have tried to find the nature of this just and courageous man, he said.

"One of our troubles today is that we have lost courage and the complete sense of justice. It is our job to reestablish it."

TO tell the story of Washington, Green said he had written a "symphonic drama" with every element of the theater—dancing, singing, acting, pageantry brought together.

For the role of George Washington, Green personally selected one of the few professionals in the show. He interviewed hundreds of applicants before he chose Charles F. McClelland, an actor for nearly all of his 48 years.

McClelland, 200 pounds and 6 feet, 3 inches tall, will dominate the stage. He was selected not only for his size and ability as an actor, but for his voice which has depth, volume and an earthy quality typical of America.

He began his career in the theater as a baby when his father, a circus contortionist, picked him up with his teeth. He has been on and off Broadway since 1928 when he made his debut there in "The Very Wise Virgin." He played in "Tobacco Road" for four years, was in the cast of "Boy Meets Girl," and was last seen in Washington in 1945 in "Dark Hammock."

"I AM honored and frightened by the role of Washington," McClelland said. "It is a tremendous thing. Long speeches must be brought to life. Mr. Green has promised to work with me on these, cutting them where they appear too long."

With the exception of the part of George Washington all casting is tentative—depending on how the actors work out in their roles.

In the role of Martha is Mary Gerschank of Winchester, Va., a professional actress who has appeared in "The Common Glory."

TWO young Washington actresses are vying for the fictitious role of "Lucy Bridges," a composite of several of George Washington's nieces. They are Joan Rowe, 17, of 3223 12th st. se., a student at Anacostia High School, and Dixie Greene, 17, of 1216 Massachusetts ave. nw., who played the role of Cornelia Otis Skinner in the Central High School version of "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay."

John Tate, a professional actor who appeared in "Tobacco Road" and "Anna Lucasta," has been cast as Billy Lee, body servant and confidant of George Washington.

ELEANOR PETERS, a direct descendant of Martha Washington, will appear as the daughter of the mayor of Alexandria.

Pearl Wolman, 856 Whittier pl. nw., was assigned the role of Betty Washington. A graduate of George Washington University, she has appeared in shows at G. W. and also at Catholic University.

Mrs. Mary Will Clements, 413 Argyle dr., Alexandria, will play Abigail Adams and understudy the role of Martha. She played "Abby" in the Alexandria Little Theater's "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Two Catholic University graduate students copped major roles. They are Ionia Zelenka, who will take the part of a commentator, and Edre Ferguson, appearing as Mrs. Bingham, Philadelphia society leader who entertains Washington.

THE play is still in a fluid state, Green told the actors. When the new amphitheater in the park is complete the play will be "fitted into it."

He indicated he will continue to rewrite, revise and cut. The cast will rehearse for eight hours a day for the next two weeks at Lisner. Then the actors will move out-of-doors.

Yesterday's rehearsal was interrupted to permit the cast to take the oath of office as Government employes and to fill out the required "57" form. The play is presented as part of the program marking the city's Sesquicentennial.

LUCY BRIDGES—Trying out for the role of Lucy Bridges, niece of George Washington, at the first scheduled rehearsal held yesterday at Lisner Auditorium were Joan Rowe (left), 17, of 3223 12th st. se., and Dixie Greene, 17, of 1216 Massachusetts ave. nw.

FAMED LADIES—Awarded name parts in the production were Mrs. Mary Will Clements (left) of 413 Argyle dr., Alexandria, Va., who will be seen as Abigail Adams; and Davie Rogers, a graduate of George Washington U., with a major in theater. Miss Rogers will play Mrs. John Randolph

By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

DANCERS—Margaret Clauses, 19, of 421 Quackenbos st. nw. (left) and Joan Kendall, 21 of 4825 Langdrum dr., Chevy Chase, Md., will dance in the symphonic drama. Two Hearings Set For Next Week in Milk Controversy

House Subcommittee, D. C. Commissioners To Weigh Markets, Sterilizing Dispute

The current controversy over the District ban on sale of milk not inspected by the local Health Department will come to a head next week at two scheduled hearings, one in the Capitol, the other before the District Commissioners.

A House District Subcommittee, headed by Representative Thomas G. Abernethy (D., Miss.) will conduct a two-day hearing, starting at 10 a. m. Wednesday, on a measure to open the markets of Washington to milk from any State, if it is up to United States Public Health Service standards.

Representative A. L. Miller (R., Nebr.), sponsor of the measure, has contended the 25-year-old District law restricting sale of milk here to that inspected by the District Health Department has created a "milk monopoly" in Washington.

Congress, Dairy Support

The Miller bill gained strong congressional support during the recent District milk strike, when the existing local law prevented importation of milk from outside the area's milkshed. The bill also is backed by independent dairies.

The pending open-the-market legislation is vigorously opposed by Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), other Congressmen from nearby areas, and the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, which furnishes most of the city's milk.

In a related action, the Commissioners will hold a hearing at the District Building at 10 a. m. Monday on proposed changes in methods of sterilizing and pasteurizing milk.

Steam Versus Chemicals

District regulations call for steam sterilization of all containers in which milk is shipped into the District. The Commissioners' hearing will be on a proposal to permit sterilization by chemicals. This has the backing of the independent dairies, but is opposed by the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers.

The opposing factions in the milk controversey have taken their stories to the public through paid advertisements in Washington newspapers.

The producers' group has concentrated on the sterilization issue, stating that the live-steam method has contributed toward reducing the infant death rate.

The other side was presented yesterday in a full page advertisement by James J. Ward, president of the independent Embassy Dairy.

"Independent" Contention

Ward said present District laws on milk purity are "no more stringent" than those of any of the 32 States which follow the regulations of the U. S. Public Health Service.

Yet the District law "bars the use of chemical sterilization of milk containers while another set of District laws permits public restaurants to sterilize their glassware and china in this identical fashion," Ward declared.

The independent dairies are opposing the steam sterilization requirement on the basis that the equipment needed for this process is costly.

The Commissioners lifted the ban against outside milk in 1942 to supplement inadequate local supplies during wartime.

On June 20, largely at the insistence of Representative Smith and the Maryland-Virginia milk producers, the ban was reinstated, thus barring importation after July 1 of about 20,000 gallons of milk which previously was being brought into the District.

Street Code Chiselers Face Action

Prince Georges County authorities yesterday ordered a crackdown on chiseling subdivision builders and contractors who are evading county street construction regulations.

The county commissioners ordered County Engineer Arthur W. Tayman to secure warrants charging the offenders with the violations.

The action folowed a report by Tayman that a "substantial number" of builders is flouting county standards.

He explained that the violations are of two types. Some builders obtain construction permits, but do not conform to the regulations. Others, he said, do not even bother to secure permits.

Authorized by Assembly

The Maryland General Assembly in 1947 authorized the county to establish road standards, which were set up in 1948. By the State act, maximum fines of $100 for each day's violation are provided.

Commissioner John H. Beall, who proposed the crackdown, declared, "If we let these builders get away with building inferior streets we might as well tear up the standards and let the rest do the same."

Standards for urban subdivisions require generally an adequate subbase, two layers of base (usually gravel), bituminous surface, curbs, gutters and storm drainage. Thickness of base and pavement surface depends on the class of street.

Among violations noted by Tayman, in addition to failure to obtain permits, were failure to construct curbs, gutters or storm drainage, insufficient base, base improperly applied and failure to lay pavement.

125 Miles Not Taken Over

Tayman pointed out that there are more than 125 miles of roads in the county which are open to the public use but which have never been taken over by the county for maintenance.

This represents an accumulation of years, however, he said, and much of the mileage is composed of short access roads in rural areas.

The inferior streets now being constructed would be added to that figure unless drastic corrective measures are taken, he asserted. Roads in this category must be maintained by abutting property owners until they are up to acceptable standards, he stated.

"We are trying to do what we can to protect the purchasers of new homes by insisting that their streets are built up to standard and can be taken into the county system," Tayman said.

At yesterday's meeting, the commissioners announced that Sidney P. Johnson of Arlington was the low bidder for construction of Arundel rd. from 30th st. to 34th st., Mount Rainier. The bid of $119,137.80 was about $30,000 less than the county's estimate.

Awarding of the contract was deferred pending the sale of bonds to finance the work.

In addition to laying 1500 feet of concrete street, the project includes relocating of a small stream, construction of concrete revetment, three street intersections and joining of Chillum rd. and 34th st.

Illegal Sales Of Fireworks Cost Man $100

Arlington County's Fourth of July fireworks toll—in injuries, arrests and fines—continued to mount yesterday.

In the county court, Vigdor Schreibman, 19, of 1404 Massachusetts ave. nw., was fined $100 and costs on two charges of selling fireworks illegally.

Leo Koenigsberg, 32, of 7221 15th ave., Takoma Park, Md., forfeited $53.25 on a similar charge after being arrested Saturday for operating a stand near Chain Bridge in Virginia.

Gas Perils Firemen

Barn Burns; Damage Put At $10,000

A two-alarm Bethesda blaze yesterday burned a barn to the ground and caused an estimated $10,000 damage as firemen fought for four hours to keep an adjacent gasoline tank from exploding.

The barn was on the farm of M. E. Weaver on Bells Mil lrd. off Old Georgetown rd. Fire companies from Bethesda, Chevy Chase, Glen Echo, Kensington and Rockville were able to save other nearby farm buildings.

They played their hose on a 300-gallon gas storage tank near the barn door to keep it from exploding.

Farm Manager Richard M. Lumpkin gave the damage estimate. He said the flames destroyed some farm machinery, 15 tons of hay and an auto all stored in the barn. He said the fire began when his tractor backfired as he drove it from the barn yesterday morning, and sparks ignited the hay.

A District Coroner's jury yesterday held Charlie H. Brown, 55, of 419 6th st. nw., for grand jury action in the baseball-bat slaying of a former flophouse employe.

Brown was charged with murder in the June 30 killing of Raymond Earl Lewis, 53, of 746 13th st. se., on the Smithsonian Institution grounds. Lewis worked for the American House, 414 9th st. nw., before it closed last February.

Brown did not testify nor was he represented by counsel. Homicide Sergt. Bernard Crooke said Brown signed a confession.

At his arraignment, Brown declared that Lewis and a "pal" had "messed up a lot of good fellows on 9th street. . . . They're the kind of people who deserve what I did."

Brown earlier told police that he saw Lewis lying on the grass between 7th and 9th sts. and Constitution ave. and Madison dr. nw., on the afternoon of the slaying. He bought a baseball bat at the Sports Center at 8th and D sts. nw police said he told them, and returned and struck Lewis in the face.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald testified Lewis died from fractured face bones, brain concussion and shock.

Mrs. Laura L. Gaertner, of 933 L st. nw., testified she saw a group of men behind a park tree. She said "It looked as if one man was swinging a baseball bat."

Later, she said a man came up to her and said, "Here's a bat for the baby. Be sure you take it home." Mrs. Gaertner was not able to identify Brown as the man.

Park Police Sergt. John H. Compton, who found Brown about 300 feet from the body, said Brown was "sort of bragging about the fact he had done a good job. He thought this man (Lewis) was a bad character, and had done a lot of things to people around 9th st."

Court Delays Refunds in Gas Rate Case

The Court of Appeals ordered the Washington Gas Light Co. yesterday to notify its customers that they might be refunded the increased rates collected since November.

The notice will be included in bills mailed after today, according to the court order.

Three judges signed the order in granting the gas company a stay in execution of the June decision of District Court Judge T. Alan Goldsborough which wiped out the $750,000 rate increase granted by the Public Utilities Commission last November.

Without this stay, the company would have been forced to refund immediately the $540,000 in increased rates collected since November 16.

Judge Goldsborough denied the stay last month, and yesterday's decision reverses him.

The Court of Appeals also ordered a hearing in October on the decision of Judge Goldsborough which set aside the increase.

Judge Goldsborough wiped out the 6.14 percent rate increase, describing the PUC order as "arbitrary," "cynical," and "illegal."

The appeal from the PUC order granting the increase was taken by Vernon E. Baker, Interstate Commerce Commission lawyer, acting as a private citizen.

Baker was represented in the Court of Appeals yesterday by Francis J. Ortman. F. G. Awalt argued for the company before Judges James M. Proctor, David L. Bazelon and Charles Fahy.

The Simple Truth About "EASY TERMS"

It is often more convenient to buy a car out of income, rather than pay cash.

But to do so involves additional cost. So it is important to keep this cost as low as possible. For instance, twenty-four months of financing service costs twice as much as twelve.

The cheapest and best way to buy on time payments is to pay all you can down and pay as much per month as you can comfortably afford.

Don't be misled by so-called "Easy" payments. Take time to check on all costs as well as services proposed when you buy.

ASK ABOUT THE GMAC PLAN . . . The PLAN that has helped millions of car buyers to satisfied ownership.

Venezuela Fetes 'Glorious 5th'

By Marie McNair and Elizabeth Maguire

IT WAS Independence Day for Venezuela yesterday and while a reception was going on at the embassy, there was another fete given by the Ceylonese Ambassador and Mme. Corea.

Esmond Wickramasinghe, chief of the editorial board of the Association of Ceylonese Newspapers, was honor guest as this fete along with one of Ceylon's distinguished surgeons, Dr. Jayawardene and his daughter, visiting the United States on a pleasure trip.

Venezuela's yellow, blue and red flag flew from the embassy's modern doorway yesterday to proclaim 139 years of Venezuelan independence. And an early evening party with the Ambassador and Senora de Pocaterra as hosts brought a turnout of official and resident Washington to celebrate the day.

Reminders of Venezuela's long struggle for freedom are the life-sized murals of Bolivar, Miranda and Alonzo de Ojeda which decorate the walls of the drawing room suite where the hosts stood yesterday to welcome the stream of guests. Fine examples of Venezuelan resources were the tawny topazes set in heavy gold, worn by Senora de Pocaterra with her black lace gown.

Receiving with them were the Minister-Counselor of the embassy and Senora de Otanez and Cesar Gonzales, president of the Venezuelan delegation of U. N. A special guest was Dr. Jose Mertorano, Director of the Ministry of Development of Venezuela, who happens to be in town at this time.

Norway's Ambassador Recalled to Post

IT was a surprise to see the Norwegian Ambassador, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, back in Washington. It was just as much a surprise to him too, to be back, for when he left by plane for Norway early in June he had expected a long summer holiday. The fighting in the Far East has forced his return and will doubtlessly keep other chiefs of mission in the Capital too. The Ambassador had only a few days with Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne and their daughters, who arrived by boat and who, as plans are at present, will remain abroad until September.

The French Ambassador, Henri Bonnet, who was an early arrival yesterday, is also a summer bachelor, Mme. Bonnet having arrived in Paris on Tuesday. Danish Ambassador Henrik Kauffmann, healthily suntanned, came in, and in "the pink" literally was Leslie Biffle, Secretary of the Senate, who spent the weekend under the Bermuda sun. Glade Biffle who made the trip with him, is due in today.

Saw blond Clark Clifford in a dark brown suit, without Mrs. Clifford who's in New Hampshire; and Spanish Ambassador-at-large, Felix Lequerica without Senora de Lequerica who stayed at home to see to last-minute details for their dinner party last night.

Wide Hallway Filled With Guests

THE Secretary General of OAS and Senora de Lleras were among those clustered in the wide hallway with its graceful twin stairway and a picture window looking into the garden.

There, too, were Paul Daniels, our Ambassador to the OAS, and Mrs. Daniels in a summer print with a hat to match her blue eyes. The Dominican Ambassador and Senora Thomen, recently back from Europe, was there also, telling of their motor trip through Spain, Portugal, France and Switzerland and a tour of the famous cathedrals.

The Egyptian Ambassador, Mohamed Kamil Bey Abdul Rahim, walked the block from his embassy; the Philippine Ambassador, Joaquin Elizalde, whose embassy is Egypt's next-door neighbor, drew up in his shiny black limousine.

The British Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks—he's another summer bachelor—sat on the sofa with the Canadian Ambassador and Mrs. Hume Wrong. The new Portuguese Ambassador, Esteves Fernandes, was meeting some of his diplomatic colleagues for the first time, and Luis Quintanilla, Mexican Chairman of the council OAS, was introducing his daughter, Jane.

Others there were the Panama Ambassador and Senora de Herbruger, the Minister of Syria, Faiz El-Khouri, and the Honduran Ambassador and Senora deValle.

Ceylon Couple Saying Farewell

THE Ambassador of Ceylon and Mme. Corea, who entertained yesterday for Esmond Wickramasinghe, were also saying farewells, as they are leaving soon for Ceylon. Mme. Corea is going to New York today and Saturday will sail on the Queen Mary for London. She will visit there before returning home. The Ambassador will join Mme. Corea in London, flying there at a later date.

A pleasant surprise at yesterday's party was the presence of Mrs. M. O. A. Baig, wife of the Pakistan Minister. Mrs. Baig has lived in London for a number of months with her two sons who are attending school there.

The Indonesian Ambassador and Mme. Ali were also guests. They said they are planning to move soon into their new embassy on Tilden st., formerly the residence of Daniel C. Roper, one-time Secretary of Commerce.

The hostess looked lovely in an American-beauty chiffon sari. She wore diamonds in her nose, according to the custom of her country, but no rings on her toes.

"I've had a hard time finding rings for my toes in Washington," said the Ambassadress, looking down at her feet unadorned except for deep red nail polish.

Looking exceptionally charming at the party was Princess Wan Waithayakon, wife of the Thailand Ambassador. She was dressed in orchid silk chiffon with which she wore amethyst and gold jewelry. Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. David Fernsler, Edgar Morris, and many State Department officials.

Your Baby

Child Needs Attention, But It Can Be Overdone

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

IF YOU want to prevent your child from becoming spoiled you should make some distinction between giving him the attention he needs and the attention he wants.

Even the tiny baby has needs which he expresses by crying. It would be the worst travesty of parenthood to deny the baby his needs. Most of the time, parents do not know what they are. Maybe mother thinks he couldn't possibly be hungry, or that he ought to be sleepy and go to sleep. Maybe she thinks that he has no reason to cry because he is comfortable and dry.

Give Baby Benefit

BUT, if he keeps crying, it is certain that whether a parent knows what it is, or not, he has some need which demands satisfaction. Until his parents are in a position to interpret it accurately, they had best give the baby the benefit of the doubt and take care of him.

If he is lying down, take him up. Just a change of position may help. Pat his back. Rock him gently and sing softly to him.

But, as he grows, his desires may outdistance his needs. The parents are in a better position to understand what he needs and what is wrong with him. If there is something wrong, then correct it. If there is nothing wrong, then smile at the baby and let him cry a little. It won't hurt him to know that he can't use you as a doormat.

Build Tolerance Easly

IN fact even in the first year his tolerance for frustration is increasing. He will begin to discover that just to let out a shriek will not bring the family running. He will discover that he can't eat just because he wants to at the moment, that the meal isn't quite ready and he, along with others, should be content to wait.

It is this combination of soothing, comforting and cuddling the baby when he is small, which develops his sense of security and later, as he grows, makes it possible to frustrate him, when it is necessary, without making either a maladjusted or a spoiled child of him.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man Informs Wife He No Longer Loves Her, But He Wants Marriage to Continue for Security Reasons; Loving Him, She Wonders If Situation Is Bearable

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Although my husband no longer loves me, he wants the marriage to go on, as normally as possible, for the sake of our child and our vested interests, which includes our home. Separation could cost us some property loss.

My marriage is the most important thing in my life, and my husband the most important thing in my marriage. I would do a great deal to keep my marriage; and if I could be sure that mutually satisfactory marriage is possible without his love, then I would stay.

However, I am a sensitive woman and I can't help feeling that I might break down under the strain of a one-sided love. Birthdays, anniversaries, etc., will be a painful tacit reminder that there is no love for me; and I am sure the same feeling would hit me in the face many times in routine living, making me moody and insecure.

Wife Is Young; Wants Full Life

WHILE it is true that I don't relish life without a male partner, and although we have no grounds for divorce, I feel that if Bob leaves I will find a certain peace of mind that I don't have now. But of course a husband represents security with all its blessings. However, at my age, 30, I feel I could still have a full life with a new husband if grounds can be made for divorce.

My little boy needs a father, of course; but even more he needs a calm, patient mother, which I have not been in the circumstances. I have tried to present Bob's slant and mine on the problem, as regards child and property; and would welcome your opinion. Can there be a successful marriage on Bob's terms? We are now going through a cooling-off period and will have to make a decision soon; so may I have an early reply?

C. V.

Man Wants Wife And Freedom Too

DEAR C. V.: Can there be a successful marriage on Bob's terms? Well, what are his terms? Do you grasp the significance of his proposition? In effect he wants to keep all that he has in marriage, including your love, allegiance and care. He wants all this as a backlog of emotional security, or as social sanctuary, for himself.

But at the same time he wants it understood, and mutually agreed—"read into the record," as we say—that he isn't emotionally committed to you. That, on the contrary, he is more or less his own man again, free to philander at his pleasure, and that you have conceded as much, and shall have forfeited right to complain, provided you decide to stay on, now that he has declared "no love" for you, while offering expedient partnership.

It is not uncommon for a man's original romantic ardor to wane, or for his wife's personality to lose savor for him, after some years' marriage. But in such case, if he wills the marriage to continue as normally as possible for security reasons, he doesn't drop any bombshells about not loving his spouse,—unless he is trying, childishly, to justify in his mind a compelling desire to play, in some part, the role of single man again, as an expression of distaste for the tedium, disciplines and obligations of married love.

Wife Deserves Better Than This

IN my opinion, Bob's proposition is blindly selfish and ignorant. He doesn't know what it is all about. It is insidiously hypocritical from every angle. Good domestic teamwork on his terms is out of the question, unless you should become all mother in relation to him, which means you would have to completely extinguish any longing for mate-love from your feelings. And that is hardly possible at your age, or indeed at any sturdy human age—especially if decreed by another's selfishness—without doing grave damage to psychologcial health.

On Bob's side of the fence, the right solution of his problem consists in revising his whole approach to security and satisfaction in life. And obviously he needs psychiatric help in this. On your side, you should recognize that he is taxing you with irrational demands, in urging continuance of marriage on terms that would turn you into a morbidly frustrated woman if you tried to conform to them. My advice is to firmly reject his expedient bargaining, and demonstrate personal faith that you are worthy of and can attain something much better than beaten compromise.

BPW Protests Veterans' Job 'Super-Preference'

By Richard K. Winslow
New York Herald-Tribune News Service

San Francisco, July 5.—The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., has disclosed that it will intensify its efforts to stop discriminations against women in Federal civil service. In particular, they protested "super-preference" for veterans.

Emphasizing that the federation was not against veterans preference in itself—only certain abuses that have arisen from it which appear to be unfair to women—the group cited instances where a veteran with short-term service in an agency replaced a woman employe with many years of service and a considerably higher efficiency rating.

They also prepared to back legislation already before Congress that would modify the point bonuses given to veterans in civil service examinations. At present, it was explained, a disabled veteran gets a 10-point bonus and a nondisabled veteran 5 points. Under the existing act, this bonus can be applied to nudge an applicant over the passing grade. The women's group will support a bill which would allow the bonus to be applied only after a passing grade has been achieved in direct competition with nonveteran applicants.

In explaining the significance of a legislative plank passed by 3000 BPW delegates, last night, which specifically asks for an end to all sex-based discrimination in civil service, Mrs. Haseelli R. Ferguson, chairman of the federation's education and vocation committee, said the group would stump against inequalities which, though not in the laws, often crop up in administrative practice.

Among these, she said, is the practice of many Federal agencies of maintaining two separate eligibility lists, one for men, the other for women. Mrs. Ferguson, who is from Evanston, Ill., said the federation suspects the men's list is often given preference especially when consideration is under way for promotion to the higher level, policy-making posts.

"When one considers that more than one third of the Federal Civil Service employes are women," she said, "it appears that women fill a ridiculously low percentage of the higher positions."

She said the group's legislative representative would also oppose the bill H. R. 6871, recently introduced, which would prohibit the employment of both a man and his wife by the Government if their combined income were over $7500.

Beach Coats Put You In the Fashion Swim

By Peggy Preston

TIME was when a beach coat resembled an overtaxed bath towel. But, as it does to practically everything we wear these days, style has come to the jacket that goes with our swim suit.

And, slaves to fashion that we are, we're enviously eyeing these jaunty new outfits. Last year's ill-fitting seersucker coat or trailing terry cloth cape seem dreary by comparison. Neither, we are forced to admit, will help us meet the stiff competition on the beaches this summer.

Yes, alas, the array of high-style beach coats tempts us sorely, and threatens to knock a hole in our vacation budget. There is, for example, a crisp, wrinkle-proof white pique, as neatly tailored as our best Sunday suit. It has big, roomy pockets, long sleeves that button at the wrists and may be worn with or without a belt. Similar versions in sailcloth and denim are pretty, too, and these have another virtue. They are sturdy, will survive the devastating effects of salt water, sun and sand.

Plenty of Cottons on the Market

LIGHTWEIGHT cottons are available in scores of cunning styles. One we especially like is of wrinkle-shed gingham, sleeveless with pockets and a string belt. This particular coat is part of a three-piece outfit which includes a bra-and-shorts swim suit.

Terry cloth is not to be overlooked either, if it is properly fashioned. This wonderful fabric, besides being inexpensive, can soak up its weight in salt water. It washes beautifully, also, and can always look fresh if you can give it the least amount of care. It is being used in lots of beachwear, both by men and women this year. There are little coats with collars and cuffs that have plenty of style. Then there is a little romper-suit made of fluffy terry cloth that you can slip on after a swim and look cute as a kitten.

All the Beach Coats Are Short

YOU'LL find that almost all the beach coats are short, the hemline reaching only a few inches below the swim suit. These, of course, look best on the long-legged, lean-limbed darlings, but the rest of us can get by in them, too. Pockets are the rule, also, and the bigger the better.

Any of the coats will be a real addition to your beach wardrobe. They are indispensable if your holiday calls for long sessions under the merciless sun, will provide protection for both your swim suit and your skin. Best of all, they help you make that long trip from hotel room to pool or beach and back again in fine style.

GLISTENING white pique is the fabric used in this neatly tailored beachcoat, designed by Frances Sider. It has a full length zipper closing and may be worn equally effectively belted or loose over your swim suit. Available at Erlebacher's

SLEEVELESS version of the season's popular beachcoat is done here in gaily checked, wrinkle-shed cotton. It matches a bra-and-shorts swim suit, and colors are blue, green and rose beige. Carolyn Schnurer designed the outfit. Available at Peck & Peck's

One on the Aisle—

Moss Hart Comedy 'Debuts' at Olney

By Richard L. Coe

"LIGHT UP THE SKY" is Moss Hart's comedy hit of the '48-'49 season which Washington hasn't seen professionally, thanks to the National Theater debacle. The Olney is currently righting this error, and an amusing evening it is.

From the start of his playwriting ("Once in a Lifetime"), nothing has so captivated Hart as his cronies of the theater. "The Man Who Came to Dinner," written with George S. Kaufman, was his best, and his finest sketches in "As Thousands Cheer" were equally theater-minded.

This time he is telling about a Broadway wiseacre who turns to serious drama to "stick a Roman candle into the tired face of show business." We're in the leading lady's Boston hotel suite just before and immediately after an out-of-town tryout. Hart shows us those immediately concerned: star, producer, director, author and immediate relatives. Before their play opens, they're in dizzy joy, right afterwards in the depths of hate and despair; when the notices come out, they perk up.

He is looking at them with the eyes of a cynical lover. He knows their unbelievable pettiness, their mercurial habits, their venomous tongues and their trusting hearts. Egocentric creatures—they have to be— their colossal selfishness strikes him as bitterly funny and understandably lovable.

While the Olney performance lacks the infinite polish and spit of the beautifully cast New York original, it has instead a curiously more likeable air. Because the critical raves at the time were so hoopla, I recall being almost angry with the original; it struck me as almost too bitter a tirade.

Delving into what Boston's Elliot Norton wrote since about the play, I find that Hart rewrote "Light Up the Sky" in Boston just as he had his author do. Originally, Norton writes, it was a much more serious play, though its carbons of public life theater folk (the Billy Roses and others) were intensely sharp.

No Idle Test

And that he did have something serious to say about the theater is indicated in his tricky quotation below the title. Ascribing it to one "Old Skroob in 'The Idle Jeste,'" he wrote: "Mad, sire? Ah, yes—mad indeed, but observe how they do light up the sky." He later confessed, a friend reminds me, that he made up the whole quotation, Old Skroob and all, but it did give the gist of his affection.

Although the Olney has a new star indeed in the faultlessly comical Vicki Cummings, the roles are far more evenly balanced than one usually gets in the star-conscious summer theater.

Miss Cumming's skating wife of the producer, who'd like nothing better than to keep her posterion warm instead of dropping $150,000 on an allegory, is a comic joy, sleek, wise and deliciously timed. Stepping into the actress role at Jean Parker's last-minute indisposition, Muriel Hutchison, after a tentative first act, pulled into the role Tuesday night with required aplomb.

Bert Thorn does a wise job with Glenn Anders' old part of the precious "I could cry" director, and Stephen Elliot is fine as the producer who makes culture pay. John C. Becher, in a brief third act appearance, is right on the button as a Shriner who loves the theater and is fascinated to find himself with all those glamorous people; it's always pleasant to find a minor character so efficiently played, and Becher well deserved that opening-night hand. Wanda Lyon has the rich role of the actress' mother, whose charwoman masquerade brought a flood of tears to the director. Robert Lowery is the astonished playwright, more mature than Barry Nelson's boyish wunderkind but effective when his time comes. Donald Foster is fine as usual as the inexperienced playwright.

Though the Olney's opening performance was more sketchy than its first nights generally are, the company is still head and shoulders over anything else within a hundred miles of our backwater Capital.

Yes, if its laughs you're wanting, Miss Cummings and her crew have them for you. Those whom the theater world amuses had better go.

"LIGHT UP THE SKY." Richard Skinner and Evelyn Freyman present the comedy in three acts by Moss Hart. Setting by S. Syriala. Directed by Harry Ellerbe. At the Olney country theater through Sunday evening. Matinees Saturday and Sunday.

Courts to Be Discussed By Arlington Democrats

Industry Mobilization Eyed

Paris, July 5 (AP).—United States Senator Herbert R. O'Conor predicted today that Congress would support fully any presidential call for partial mobilization of United States industry.

He expressed the opinion that industry and labor also would "go along wholeheartedly" if such a call goes out. Senator O'Conor voiced these views in reply to questions at a news conference. He headed the United States delegation to the International Labor Organization conference in Geneva June 7 to July 1.

The Maryland Democrat praised President Truman's decision to send United States forces to aid Southern Korea and added his belief that "the great majority of American people and Congressmen are behind him all the way."

"I firmly believe that we must do everything that is imperatively needed to restore peace and halt aggression in Korea," he declared. "We are facing a situation in which we cannot temporize too much.

"Spain," he said, "is the natural foe of communism. It has shown a commendable attitude in this regard."

D. C. Finds Second Case of Pavement Cushioned on Air

District highway and sewer officials yesterday reported the second recent case of a street pavement resting on space near the junction of 22d and 23d sts. and Massachusetts ave. nw.

Last February they found that a sewer line break had washed out earth and formed a large cave under 22d st. north of Q st. Yesterday, after receiving reports of a depression in the pavement of 23d st. between P and Q sts., they poked a hole in the pavement and found six inches of air space, according to Sewer Division Engineer Y. J. Wright.

Samuel R. Harrison, deputy director of highways, said the full extent of damage won't be known until the pavement is removed today. Traffic will be detoured around that block of 23d st. for the next few days, he said.

Integrate Entire European Market, Dutch Suggest

A team of Dutch labor leaders called for integration of the entire European market yesterday as the only way Western Europe can hope to compete with American mass production methods.

The Dutch labor leaders said in a report that only through integration of the entire European market can the Marshall Plan nations hope to achieve higher living standards made possible by such techniques.

The report followed a month-long visit to this country by the Dutch labor leaders under the sponsorship of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

'Bond Street' Uses Trousseau To Link Some Disparate Lives

Dupont Device Doesn't Click

"BOND STREET," at the Dupont, is one of those pictures that attempts to spin several stories on a single thread. It doesn't come off.

London's fashion center is the setting, and we see something of the lives of people connected with getting together a bride's wedding outfit. The stories are stilted and slow-moving and, though the cast has some very topflight names, no one is especially impressive.

Kathleen Harrison is the center of the first. She's the seamstress for the bridal gown. That, and another's order for a dress in which to welcome her war-blinded son, now recovered, complicate her own personal life.

Derek Farr is the center of the second yarn, involving his attempted theft of the bride's diamond necklace. His career as a self-pitying thug is neither moving nor convincing.

An unattractive little seamstress of the bridal veil finally finds a man for her lonely life in Ronald Howard, son of the late Leslie, and this episode has the truest ring of the lot. The writers and director have shrewdly let us see how the other characters pass one another during their day, but the device from which much might have been made isn't followed to its limit.

The finale gives you the bride herself, and how she nearly lost her groom to a Scandinavian Auslander who befriended him during the war. The tone of this one, rough on the Danes, attempts to use Roland Young's dry humor, but it's too late to be amused.

Writers Terence Rattigan and Rodney Ackland collaborated in the screen play, initially devised by Director De Grunwald. Despite their usual skills, they're in a half-baked humor. So, unfortunately, is "Bond Street."—R. L. C.

"BOND STREET." Associated British Picture Corp. release produced by Anatole de Grunwald. Screen play by de Grunwald; episodes by Terence Rattigan, Rodney Ackland and de Grunwald. Music by Adrian Foley and Phil Park. Photographed by Otto Heller. Directed by Gordon Parry. At the Dupont.

8 Out of 10 D. C. Indexes Up This Year

By S. Oliver Goodman

Eight out of 10 Washington business barometers show substantial increases so far this year, a study indicated yesterday.

The important building industry leads the way. Construction permits for the first five months aggregated $29,041,183 in District of Columbia alone, an increase of 47 percent over the like period last year.

Department store sales was the one major index on the downside with local dollar volume for the first five months reported 2 percent less than in the same period last year. It appeared that the apparel and other soft goods lines were the principal items on the downside, while furniture and other hard goods showed continued increases.

Bank clearings for the first half amounted to a record $2,202,696,461, a gain of 18 percent as compared with the same 1949 period. Bank deposits totaled $1,086,880,097 for a climb of 4.7 percent for the first six months.

Sales of new passenger autos set a new five-month high here of 13,049, or a gain of 5 percent over the corresponding 1949 period.

Local mail revenues for the first six months also registered a new peak of $9,640,977 for an upturn of 2.5 percent.

Potomac Electric Power Co. reported energy sales in the first five months went up 5.5 percent to a record total of 894,767,755 kilowatt hours. Gas sales showed an even more remarkable surge, climbing 24 percent in the same period to 100,579,646 therms. Telephones in service continued a steady increase with 473,269 on May 31, a gain of 4 percent over the same 1949 date.

Capital Transit suffered a 10.6 percent decrease in revenue passengers during the first five months, with 118,944,506 riding its buses and street cars in the period.

DEALERS PREVIEW: More than 600 Washington dealers have been invited to a preview of the new RCA Victor television line at the Statler Hotel tonight. Host is Southern Wholesalers. Les Braun, sales manager of the local distributor, said 18 new models will be on display, featuring larger screens and lower prices. Tonight's exhibit is prior to public introduction on July 16.

IN NEW POST: Bert M. Sarazan has been appointed vice president of the Washington firm of Robert J. Enders Advertising, Inc. President Robert Enders said that Sarazan initially will concentrate on developing nationally syndicated television programs. Sarazan recently completed a year's assignment with the Hecht Company stores in Baltimore where he supervised operation of "Television Shoppers Revue." Previously he was publicity director of the Hecht Co. in Washington for 10 years. He is the author of many books on advertising and is well known in publicity and retail circles here and nationwide.

Man Charged With Assault By Truck

A charge of assault with a dangerous weapon—a truck—has been placed again Horace L. Kinser, 36, of 607 North Carolina ave. se., by District Police.

Kinser's wife, Mrs. Betty Kinser, 36, is in critical condition in Gallinger Hospital with internal injuries and a fractured pelvis sustained when a truck driven by her husband passed over her body in the 1800 block of New York ave. ne., early Sunday according to police.

Police said they placed the assault charge against Kinser after he told conflicting stories about how the accident happened. Precinct Detective Emmett R. Waters of the Accident Investigation Unit said Kinser could not explain blood on the right front of the truck. He had first told police that only the right rear wheel of the truck had struck his wife, Waters said.

Kinser was arrested Tuesday night and was arraigned yesterday before Municipal Court Judge Walter J. Casey. He was held on $5000 bond. His case has been continued until August 10 pending the outcome of his wife's injuries.

Shortly after Mrs. Kinser was injured, Kinser told police she had been hurt when she fell out of the truck as he swerved to avoid an oncoming vehicle. Later, he told police his wife jumped from the truck.

Waters said police proved it to be a physical impossibility for Mrs. Kinser to be injured as she was either by jumping or falling from the truck.

Waters said police had received a call for a fight at the Royal Diner, 1915 New York ave. ne., shortly after midnight on the night of the accident. They said they found Mrs. Kinser fighting two women and her husband. The Kinsers left the diner in a cab, they said.

Kinser told police that he borrowed a truck when his wife wanted to return to the diner. He said they argued on the way, and had stopped in the filing station at 1943 New York ave. ne., where he is employed as an attendant, to continue the argument.

Annapolis Annexation Must Wait

Annapolis, Md., July 5 (AP).—Annapolis will remain its old self until January 1, under a court decision filed today.

Circuit Judge James Clark ruled that annexation of 11 suburbs cannot take effect until that date.

He held that an annexation charter commission's recommendation of January 1 as an effective date "is final" and could not be changed by the city council.

Clark dismissed a friendly taxpayer's suit arranged by the city asking that annexation go into effect right away.

Suburbanites voted in a May 23 referendum to become part of the State capital. Eight new aldermen they elected to represent four new wards won't take office until January.

Annapolis now has a population of 15,061 in an area of less than a square mile. After January 1 it will have a population of 23,900 in an area of more than five square miles.

Clark's decision was filed in Anne Arundel County Circuit Court. Its effect was to hold up city council ordinances extending city services throughout the annexed area.

Anti-Rabies Dog Vaccinations Start July 10, Conclude Aug. 4

The District's annual antirabies vaccination program for dogs will be held at 12 centers from July 10 through August 4, the District Health Department announced yesterday.

Walter W. Burdette, director of the department's bureau of food inspection, reminded dog owners they are required to have their dogs vaccinated each year. Since 1945, when the first antirabies campaign was held, the number of rabid dogs reported in the District during a year has dropped from 107 to 1, Burdette said.

Free vaccinations will be given on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, except on rainy days, from 4 p. m. to 6 p. m. at the following locations, Burdette stated:

Northwest: Adams School, 19th and California sts.; Alice Deal Junior High School, Fort Drive and Nebraska ave., rear of 3206 N st.; old Polk School, 7th and P sts.; Upshur Street Hospital, 14th and Upshur sts.; Whittier School, 5th and Sheridan sts.

Falls Church's Credit Is Good, Hearing Told

The City of Falls Church would have no difficulty in borrowing funds to improve newly annexed teritory, two witnesses testified yesterday before a three-judge court hearing the city's annexation suit against Fairfax County.

Testimony on the city's credit rating was introduced in Fairfax Circuit Court in the 12th day of the suit in an effort by Falls Church attorneys to show that the city could finance "interim" property improvements until it could begin reaping tax revenues from the annexed territory. Cost of the initial improvements has been estimated at about $900,000.

Under state law, the city could take no revenue from new territory until it had expended therein at least 12 percent of the assessed value of the territory on public improvements.

Lee M. Rhoades, a member of the Falls Church City Council and chairman of its finance committee, introduced two letters from bonding concerns indicating they would be interested in purchasing up to $900,000 worth of city bonds in the event of annexation. The letters came from the American Security and Trust Co. and Goodwyn and Olds, Washington investment bankers.

Supporting Rhoades' testimony was R. H. Brooke, jr., municipal bonding representative of a Lynchburg investment concern which recently joined other firms in the purchase of $3,000,000 worth of bonds from Fairfax County.

He compared the credit rating of Falls Church with the Virginia cities of Norfolk, Petersburg and Bristol.

Brooke said he believed the city's bonds or short term loans would be readily marketable and described the proposed Falls Church debt ratio of 9.7 percent of assessed value as "conservative."

Dr. Thomas H. Reed, a municipal affairs expert from Wethersfield, Conn., praised the "adequacy" of the present city government and said he believed it could give satisfactory service to the added territory should the annexation move succeed.

Dr. Reed described Falls Church as a "portion" of the Washington metropolitan area, with interests directly linked to Government installations here. He said he believed the urban annexation zone had kindred interests and would be better suited to be part of the city than a subdivision of rural Fairfax County.

The suit, in which the city seeks 10.75 square miles of county territory, resumes today at 10:30 a. m.

Papanicolas Heads Greek Organization

George Papanicolas, Washington attorney, was elected president of the Pan Macedonian Association in the closing session of the organization's annual convention at the Statler Hotel yesterday.

Paponicolas

The new president, who lives at 4735 Butterworth pl. nw., succeeds Dr. Stephen Ladas of New York City.

Others elected were S. Papadopoulos, of Chicago, first vice president; Zachary D'Jimas of Albany, N. Y., second vice president; Tasso Pappas of New York City, secretary, and Constantine Mamatseos of Bristol, Conn., treasurer.

In resolutions passed at the convention, the association supported United States and United Nations action in Korea, and protested the abduction of 28,000 Greek children into Russian satellite countries.

The society was formed, according to its officers, to enlighten world opinion as to the Hellenic identity of Macedonia, and to prevent the separation of Macedonia from Greece.

Judge Hits Lack Of Drunk Driving Testing Facilities

Arlington County Court Judge Hugh Reid yesterday complained of the county's lack of testing equipment in drunken driving cases, as he dismissed drunk driving and reckless driving charges against a Washington man.

The defendant was Robert B. Coates, 52, of 5604 39th st. nw. His attorney, William Nemeth, claimed Coates' driving was erratic at the time of his arrest because of head injuries received in a fight a few minutes before.

Judge Reid commented that either the head wounds, or two drinks the defendant admitted taking earlier, could have caused Coates' behavior. "We are bound to have this occurring as long as we are too tight to spend $200 or $300 for testing equipment," he said.

Officer Found Prowling in D. C. Residence

A prowling and inebriated Air Force lieutenant colonel was arrested early yesterday morning, after having been identified as the man who broke into the Georgetown home of a State Department official.

No charges were placed against the man, since nothing was missing from the home, but Defense officials said they would investigate the incident further.

Mrs. Bromley Smith, wife of a special assistant to the Secretary of State, told police she was wakened at 3 a. m. by a prowler in her home at 2700 O st., nw.

Smith appeared Sunday on a State Department-CBS television program, giving the background of the Korean war.

The Air Force officer, described by police as a 31-year-old student at the George Washington University School of Government, was seen by a passerby, Albert Powell, 2705 O st. nw., to jump from a brick wall surrounding the Smith home to the street, police said.

The officer told police he had been drinking and could remember nothing after he and his wife left the Belle Haven Country Club in Alexandria.

'Doc' Conway, Dies in Crash; Race Starter

T. W. "Doc" Conaway, auto race starter at a number of nearby tracks, died yesterday at 1:30 p. m. in a Salisbury, Md., hospital after an auto crash Tuesday night with a Greyhound bus.

Conaway, a feature writer for Speed Age on the old board track days, was returning from Keller, Va., where he was starter at July Fourth races, when his car collided with the bus near Salisbury.

He had been a starter at the Lanham Speedway both this year and last, and also had worked the Hybla Valley, Hagerstown, Rising Sun, Manassas, Va., and other tracks.

Marshall College Alumni Forming Chapter Here

A Washington chapter of the Marshall College Alumni Association is to be organized at 8 p. m. Friday at the Victory Room of the Ambassador Hotel.

Dr. Stewart H. Smith, president of the Huntington, W. Va. school, will speak. Anyone who has attended classes at Marshall is eligible to join.

Robinson Heads Fairfax Board

Fred W. Robinson, Herndon (Va.) business man, was elected to his ninth consecutive term as chairman of the Fairfax County school board yesterday.

In an annual "reorganization" of the school board required by law, its members also reelected Alex Haight, of Fairfax, as vice-chairman, and W. Clement Jacobs, of Herndon, as clerk to the board.

Robinson, who operates a dairy feed and farm machinery business at Herndon, was among principal advocates of a $10,500,000 bond issue for critical school construction which was approved by county voters in a referendum May 30.

At yesterday's meeting, the board approved a proposal to transfer 8th, 9th and 10th grade students living in McLean to the Fairfax High School from the Falls Church High School. A companion plan, providing for the transfer of students living in Chesterbrook, was shelved by the board.

Transfer of the students had been proposed as a means of alleviating congestion in the three grades at the Falls Church school. A number of parents from the Chesterbrook area had filed vigorous protests.

Although many of the McLean students will have to ride greater distances to the new school, their transportation will be furnished by county buses, it was pointed out.

After a visit to the Bucknell-Belle Haven area, where a new elementary school is to be built, the board withdrew consideration of one of two proposed sites for the project. The tract, o nQuander rd. in Bucknell, was deemed unsatisfactory because its use would necessitate condemnation of land now occupied by Negro families who have no other homesites, school officials said.

Too many night club impresarios are getting very careless with the billing. "World's Greatest Entertainer!" It must have embarrassed Danny Thomas . . . No film thespian ever topped Constance Bennett's weekly wage: $30,000 . . . Wonder what Nancy Sinatra thinks when Frank sings that song about being sorry.

"Peep Show" generates enough shelectricity to keep the Winter Garden glowing for many months. Just add a few giggles to the wiggles and everything will be ship-shapely . . . In "The Next Voice You Hear," Nancy Davis (a newcomer) has a future sprinkled with the silver pepper of stardust . . . A British cinema called "Kind Hearts and Coronets" deals with a beastleh rottah who murders eight people—but manages to be vastly amusing comedy . . . "Secret Fury" has this kind of plot: Claudette Colbert portrays a gel who is not only beautiful but talented and rich. So the scenarists get her into more trouble than a soap-opera heroine . . . Most literate disc-jock is Arthur Treacher, formerly of the feelms. He does all his gabbing in verse with a What-Ho accent. Rah-thah! . . . Top howl in the feature-length newsreel titled "50 Years Before Your Eyes" is Mr. Truman mimicking H. V. Kaltenborn's starchy style.

Hubbell Robinson, CBS exec., is no Atlantic City, Atlantic Beach or Rockaway man. Filming of 'Wings' Established Records

By Dick Grace

This is the fifth of a series of stories by one of America's most colorful fliers.

The series is a condensation of the recent book, "Visibility Unlimited" Longmans, Green.

CHAPTER FIVE

I was in the picture "Wings," directed by William Wellman, ace of the Lafayette Escadrille.

The main part of the picture was taken at Kelly Field near San Antonio. All the aviation work was done by Army fliers under the supervision of the Army Air Forces, except the international crashes.

It was the biggest attempt yet made to incorporate spectacular mass flight into a motion picture and no expense was spared.

Generals Lahm and Fechet, top-ranking officers of the Army, F. Trubee Davison, Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation, and others had come from Washington, D. C., to witness the filming of some of the scenes for the picture. At the field was H. H. (Hap) Arnold, then a major.

We scheduled the Fokker crash as part of the big counter-offensive against the German air force. I was the villain in the Fokker cockpit.

This was the crash that hung on the borderline of possible or impossible. I wished to have it over. I was out on a limb and knew it.

The difficulty lay in the requirements for the scene: My plane was to be shot down directly after its take off and it must nose in to the ground immediately with full power, full speed. Time and distance were ganging up on me.

Cameras were in position. A long line of them extended from the spot where I said I'd crash to the point of my farthest approximated advance. All angles were covered.

All but enough gasoline necessary for the flight was withdrawn from the main tanks as further fire protection. Word was sent to Wellman that everything was ready.

Climbing into the cockpit I adjusted the belts extremely tight. They'd take their limit of strain in this one. The motor was turning over slowly. Back of me was the P-I ready for take off. It must time correctly to get on my tail, shoot me down at the exact moment.

It had to come out right, for there were the generals who had come down to see this. And the Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation and Major Arnold of Kelly Field.

Wellman came over. "Everything okay?"

"Absolutely."

Timing of the Start

"I'll give you the red flag. Anytime after that. Only be sure to time your start with Johnson's dive. You should be between 75 and 100 feet in the air."

The red flag. Then Johnson gave his P-I fighter the gun and was off in a cloud of dust. He made a climbing turn and verticalled back in my direction.

The chocks were pulled from my wheels. I was ready. I glanced downfield to the spot.

Johnson was in position. The time had come. The throttle went forward. The tail came up. I was off.

Looking back I saw the P-I diving. He was coming closer and closer. So was that spot. Jets of white were spitting from his machine guns. It was a signal that coordinated our action.

The spot was waiting for me. Our timing was perfect. The nose went groundward. I angled slightly, crabbing a bit to the right toward that weakened fuselage. I was going in. The ground was coming ever, ever nearer. Speed, 110 m.p.h. Fast—too fast. I had not the time, the distance . . . what was the use of thinking of those things now? Those calculations meant nothing at this stage.

Wingtip Dug Into Ground

The wingtip dug into the ground, spewing dirt. The aileron and lower panel crumpled as did the N strut. The propeller split and shattered in a thousand different directions. Everything so far was as had been figured. The forces and speed were being distributed nicely.

Then one of those things happened, apparently inconsequential in itself but of vital importance in the over-all scheme of things.

The steel-tubed landing gear which had been weakened failed to give, as did the solid beams. With my speed little diminished, the injured wing lifted from the ground. The crosswind caught the ship and I was in the air. My ailerons were broken—useless. Impossible to dig the wing in.

If the ship travelled much farther the shot would be no good. It must be a nose-in—a nose-in at a bad angle of attack meant that the full impact would be transferred to the cockpit and to me. My chest was against the belts so there would be no snap when I hit. The stick was forward.

I felt the jolt quite distinctly and knew that my chest belts had broken. Something in my brain snapped as my head hit the instrument panel and broke through it.

Ordered to Base Hospital

I was ordered to the base hospital at Fort Sam Houston.

There, Maj. Norman T. Kirk made an examination. I asked him for something to ease the pain—told him I had to fly the other Fokker that afternoon. He wasn't listening to me. He rushed me to Colonel Pillsbury for X-rays. The two of them conferred at length when they examined the plates.

"Guess I'll be on my way," I said. "Be back tomorrow for treatment."

"You're not going any place except to bed," Kirk answered.

"Bed?"

"Right. It's a wonder you're alive. You have what is ordinarily termed—a broken neck."

"But——"

"That isn't all. Your sixth cervical is dislocated—out of line an eighth of an inch. That alone is enough to kill almost anyone."

"How bad is—it broken?" afraid of the answer.

"There are seven cervical vertebrae between your skull and backbone. Four of yours are crushed—besides the dislocation. You're through flying."

"Guess I'll stay," I mumbled.

"Thanks," he said ironically.

Made Medical History

What he didn't do to me in the operating room has not been done by medical science. He set a precedent when he performed that operation on my neck which I have been told made medical history.

Sixteen weeks later I was shipped to the Hollywood Hospital on the West Coast where the plaster cast was removed. I spent another six weeks with my feet tied to the foot of the bed, my head stretched by weights.

Then I received my permanent harness. It was a leather and iron contraption with a chin rest to ease the perpetual backache I had acquired—and an arrangement of straps made it convenient for me to handle myself.

I was now outfitted for life, they said.

But I got well. And I flew many times again.

Scouts Begin Breaking Camp As Jamboree Draws to Close

Valley Forge, Pa., July 5 (AP).—Forty-seven thousand Boy Scouts at the secon dnational jamboree put their motto—"Be Prepared"—to practice today and began packing as the sprawling tent city neared the end of its seven-day life span.

The mass exodus will start Thursday night and the last contingent will be away from historic Valley Forge by nightfall Saturday.

More than 37,000 will travel home by 100 special trains. Nearly 8000 others will go by chartered buses and the remainder will use private automobiles.

Twenty thousand campers are scheduled to visit New York City before going home. Scores of others will stop over at Washington, D. C., Boston, Chicago, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Pittsburgh and St. Louis. A few groups will spend several days at New Jersey seashore resorts to obtain their first glimpse of the Atlantic Ocean.

Thirty-eight Scouts from the Los Angeles Rainbow Troop arrived in camp today—five days after the jamboree opened officially. Their chartered bus broke down at Flagstaff, Ariz.

Bullet Renews Polo Grounds Death Mystery

New York, July 5 (AP).—Just as police believed they were near a solution today to the slaying of Bernard Lawrence Doyle at the Polo Grounds, the mystery took a new turn.

Doyle, 54, a former fight manager of Fairview, N. J., slumped dead with a bullet in the head yesterday as he sat in the grandstand to watch the double-header between the New York Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers.

Police, believing he was slain with a .22-caliber bullet, arrested a 14-year-old boy.

Then a high police official revealed that Doyle had died from a .45-caliber bullet wound.

Police did not believe the fatal bullet was fired from inside the Polo Grounds. The bullet, probably was fired, the official said, "by someone celebrating Independence Day or by a person with a depraved mind."

The 14-year-old youth was arrested when 40 detectives, searching the roofs of apartments overlooking the Polo Grounds, found several empty .22 caliber shells on the roof of a building about 1200 feet from the spot where Doyle was shot.

In an apartment one floor below, where Peebles lived, police found a .22 caliber target pistol and two .22 rifles.

Establishment of the .45 bullet as the death pellet sent 80 detectives on a new, painstaking search of the Polo Grounds and Coogan's bluff to the west.

Cafes Must Open To Health Aides, Almond Rules

Richmond, Va., July 5 (AP).—An opinion by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., today held that a county sanitation officer has authority to inspect, restaurants without interference from the owners.

Almond's opinion answered an inquiry from Bernard Mahon, Caroline County Commonwealth's attorney. Mahon reported that a Caroline inspector had been interfered with while attempting to make a routine inspection of a restaurant.

The attorney general referred to Section 35-30 of the State code which says:

"The commissioner (of health) and his assistants shall have police power to enter any restaurant at reasonable hours to determine whether the provisions of this chapter and the rules and regulations promulgated hereunder are being complied with."

Tree Chopping Suit Settled Out of Court

The damage suit of two Montgomery County residents, who claimed a Clarksburg, Md., company chopped down about 100 white oak trees on their property, has been settled out of court for $4750.

Suit was filed last year by Willard M. Kiplinger of 6609 River rd., Bethesda, publisher of the Kiplinger Letters, and Mrs. Aileen G. Wrightson of 16 Hesketh st., Chevy Chase. They asked $76,000 damages from the B. & M. Stave Co. of Clarksburg, which manufactures barrel staves.

Body Is Recovered Off Ocean City, Md.

Ocean City, Md., July 5 (AP).—Coast Guardsmen late today pulled the body of a man from the Atlantic Ocean, 19 miles off this summer resort.

Except for one sock, the body was naked.

State police were investigating to establish the man's identity. There was no indication how long the body had drifted in the ocean.

Paul Russell of Ocean City sighted it while on a fishing cruise. He radioed the Coast Guard station here.

Varga Reported Directing Hungarian Economy

Belgrade, July 5 (NYHT)—Moscow has made Eugene Varga, noted economist, Soviet economic dictator for Hungary, Premier Marshal Tito's press said last night.

Varga was named "economic councilor" to the satellite regime in Budapest "recently" and in that capacity "immediately took control of the country's production and consumption," according to the evening paper "Glas," one of three leading Belgrade organs of the Tito regime.

Dramatic Demonstration

Color TV Isn't Locked in a Lab

By Sonia Stein

WHILE the FCC has been worrying about the ramifications involved in authorizing color television for the general public, the little darling has been out of the laboratory and running around loose. The CBS color system has been getting around in medical circles while the RCA color system, which has been getting into thousands of Washington homes in a black and white version, has just started toying with the advertising crowd.

Last week brought the situation into dramatic focus. The very week that proponents in the color TV controversy filed briefs summarizing nine months of argument before the FCC and each asking authorization of its system, the two leading contenders were actually producing color shows of historical importance.

In San Francisco, CBS celebrated the first anniversary of surgical demonstrations via color TV—something that has been called the greatest single contribution to medical teaching in history—with the eleventh in a series of such demonstrations.

In Washington, RCA produced, for the first time in color, a commercial show—the life blood of the industry. Like the noncommercial color shows WNBW airs every day for testing purposes, this show was seen in black and white on present sets, and in color on a few color sets distributed strategically at WNBW and the homes of members of the FCC.

The FCC hopes to issue some decision—conclusive or inconclusive—by Labor Day.

Each Claims Prize

REVIEWED in a nutshell, the briefs of the two leading contenders, RCA and CBS, were biased, persuasive, nicely printed.

On the highly critical matter of which system will fit more easily with current black and white sets, each claimed the prize. RCA claimed it on the ground that it is "compatible," because its color shows can be received on present sets in black and white without so much as a shift of a knob.

CBS claimed it on the ground that present sets can be inexpensively converted for CBS color—something RCA has yet to show that it can do. Compatibility, CBS points out, is not color, and color is what we are trying to get.

But in less legal neighborhoods, there was little argument over last week's color events. Although the RCA commercial show in color wasn't much for fidelity—blonds appearing as redheads, and sun-brown skins turning pale—it was strong in emotional appeal.

Surgeons are Awed

IN SAN FRANCISCO, where the American Medical Association was seeing CBS color perform, there wasn't any argument about fidelity. Like the approximately 100,000 viewers at previous demonstrations, these doctors were awed by the realistic color, depth and texture. As one doctor remarked at an earlier demonstration, "The color is so real as to be 'spooky'."

(High fidelity of this system was pointed up even during early color surgery, when surgeons are reported to have said, "It's perfect the way it is. For God's sake, don't fiddle with it"—reported in just those words in statements to the FCC by Smith, Kline and French Laboratories, which has underwritten the cost of equipment and labor involved in these medical demonstrations.)

In the industrial field, CBS system is already being prepared for observation work. In atomic research, for example, the color camera can venture where man need fear to tread.

So rest assured, color TV is not all locked up in a batch of briefs. It's out getting around as best it can without official sanction.

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Looks Like Bill Should Have Stood in Bed

I don't know where I got the ambition to try it, but shortly after dawn on the Fourth, I was en route to a golf course.

But East Potomac was already crowded with a line of waiting club swingers. There was a mob on the first tee at Anacostia. And Fort Dupont was no better.

I went home and crawled back in bed. That's where a man my age belongs, anyhow.

CONVERT

One of my neighbors is a mild matron who, until recently, knew nothing whatever of baseball. She had never been to a game and didn't even know the rules of the national pastime.

Then they got a television set.

It was the usual story. She watched the Nats for a while and became a regular rooter. She was happy when they won, somewhat depressed when they lost.

"Why don't you go out to the Stadium some time?" her husband suggested. The idea intrigued her, and she went out to the Fourth of July doubleheader.

When she got home, she was furious. Our Heroes had kicked away the first game and merely tied the Yankees in the second, and my mild, matronly neighbor was steaming mad.

"Gee whiz," I said. "You never carried on like this when you saw the Nats lose on television."

"Television, bah!" she snorted. "When you see them lose in person, it really hurts."

SUGGESTION BOX

We've all seen traffic fouled up on those rare occasions when signal lights "get stuck" and refuse to change properly.

Eric Reisfeld of 9905 Lorain ave., Silver Spring, Md., suggests that it shouldn't be too difficult to install circuit breakers that would shut off the lights whenever the normal cycle is disturbed.

I'd be glad to whip up such a gadget for Traffic Director Keneipp except that I'm still busy inventing my perpetual motion machine.

PERSONAL NOTES

Ham Dow, 600 Easley st., Silver Spring, Md.: That's right; if your item inspires Coak to do a cartoon about it, you're entitled to the original, on request. Yours is being mailed.

THIS IS WASHINGTON

It was at one of the big Government agencies. The woman from whom I had hoped to get some information was off for the day.

"Will she be back tomorrow?" I asked.

"Well," came the dubious reply, "that depends on whether she's taking annual leave or sick leave—and when she left last night she wasn't sure which it would be."

MISCELLANY

I still don't know why there's no No. 79 K st. nw., but an old timer tells me that back in 1870 there was an open sewer at that spot, and that a house was later built over the site . . . Carolyn Cunningham of 1004 Crittenden st. ne., former editor of The Easterner, tells me that some 40 Eastern High School students and recent graduates have formed a committee to "aid in the building up of the Southeastern area." First project is to redecorate the lawn of the home of the first Mayor of Washington. (Yep, we used to have one) . . . "Speak a good word for Inspector William J. Cunningham," writes a local businessman. "He's a grand guy and a good cop" . . . Yep, and you could say as much for most of the other men on the force . . . The Kalorama Playground, on Columbia rd. nw. between California and Mintwood pl., needs a small piano. Anybody who can help is asked to call the Playground Director on Adams 7077 . . . Mrs. W. F. Mahon of 1301 Seminary rd., Silver Spring, Md., agrees that District Liners should leave no debris behind in Rock Creek Park picnic groves, but wonders why somebody doesn't raise a fuss about the unclean condition of the public restrooms in the park . . . John W. Hartsfield of 204 N. View Terrace, Alexandria, Va., says there's no trouble about traffic arrows in his city. They always mean exactly what they appear to mean, and you don't have to guess whether a "Through" arrow also permits right- or left-hand turns . . . Mrs. Fred Meredith of 1016 S. Scott st., Arlington, Va., passes along some interesting information about a newly formed cooperative school for "exceptional children." They're "exceptional" in that they've been retarded for physical or mental reasons, and need something more than the usual kind of educational training. The group will meet at 7:30 p. m. on the 18th, at Georgetown Library, and parents wishing additional information may call Chestnut 9132 . . . Bill Plampin of 4108 Tunlaw ter. nw. tells me I'm behind the times with the suggestion that postal zone numbers be stenciled on neighborhood mail boxes. "They've been doing it in New York for years," says Bill . . . Sign near Red Cross headquarters: "No Parking Only By Appointment" . . . Bob Weitershausen of 800 N. Wayne st., Arlington, Va., suggests that the fellow who draws the Steve Roper comic strip should have boned up on archery before starting the sequence in which the weird creature in the cave almost puts an arrow through Spotshot's editor. His technique with a bow is something fierce . . . Grocery stores were just getting back into the practice of handing out samples of foods and drinks again—and now the commentators are talking about the possibility of a return to wartime rationing.

IS HALF A WIT BETTER THAN NO WIT AT ALL?

I'm well on my way . . . To becoming a wit . . . My friends and admirers declare . . . In fact, every time . . . That I pun them a bit . . . They tell me that I'm halfway there.

Guy B. Epling.

Truman, MacArthur Get Along

By Drew Pearson

Considering the fact that they are members of opposite political parties and once rival candidates for the Presidency, General MacArthur and President Truman have coordinated on the Korean crisis exceptionally well. In fact, they get along better than some of MacArthur's fellow generals in the Pentagon, whom "Doug" sometimes treats with high-handed disdain.

Pearson

Two historic telecommunication conversations were held between MacArthur and the White House in the first stages of the Korean war. The first was the night before Truman issued his world-shaking announcement that American forces would intervene. The second was four days later when MacArthur gave an extremely gloomy picture of the Korean military rout and asked for permission to land ground troops. When MacArthur made this proposal, Pentagon officials teletyped back the suggestion that he make a formal request. MacArthur replied crisply: "Consider it made." Permission was immediately granted.

MacArthur talked on the telecom in somewhat the same stilted language he uses in his now-famous communiques. He did not speak disparagingly of the South Koreans, but used such phrases as "the Koreans in their efforts to resist communism" must be helped. helped.

Secretary of the Army Frank Pace stayed in the communications room in the Pentagon during the second conversation with MacArthur and phoned the White House direct for decisions that were over his head.

In his first conversation with the White House, MacArthur was full of optimism, and informed Truman that he could "guarantee" success whether Russia intervened in Korea or not.

MacArthur Pessimistic

In his second conversation, held just after MacArthur had flown to Korea, he was quite pessimistic; in fact, much more so than the official communiques issued in Tokyo. MacArthur had already proceeded to bomb North Korea before asking Washington for permission, which caused some embarrassment, since, when the North Koreans claimed their air base was bombed, Washington had emphatically denied it.

It also caused worry in the State Department because of the understandable desire to operate in close coordination with the United Nations.

However, in the second telecom conversation, MacArthur was given complete authority, including the use of ground forces and the right to bomb North Korea, in order to win the war as quickly as possible.

Note—MacArthur also demanded that more divisions be rushed to Japan from the United States plus heavy equipment.

Pentagon Crisis

As grim-faced military leaders waited gravely for the latest news from embattled Korea, a dismayed screech echoed down the corridors of the Pentagon.

A moment later, a girl rushed out of an office, shouting mournfully:

"Rosen just hit a homer with the bases full!"

This was the play by which Cleveland defeated Washington that day.

Graham's Friends

The Postoffice Department is investigating the anti-Negro organizations that mailed inflammatory racial propaganda from New York designed to defeat liberal Senator Frank Graham of North Carolina.

Graham himself, however, doesn't want any post-election investigation—not even by Senator Gillette's Senate Campaign Committee, which is interested in the reported one million dollars spent by Yankee Republicans and Dixiecrats.

What really hurts Graham way deep down is the fact that the mill workers and other poorer people whose cause he has always championed, turned their back on him on election day.

Apparently, they listened to the most vicious racial propaganda since the Civil War days—tons of literature circulated by Alabama Klansmen, anti-Graham propaganda mailed out under the franking privileges of Congressman Gwinn of New York, the friend of General Eisenhower; and the diatribes of America Firster John T. Flynn inserted in the Congressional Record by Maine's Senator Owen Brewster, chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee.

Apparently the poorer people, whom Graham had always championed, listened and believed. For 63,000 of them who had voted for him in the first primary stayed away from the polls in the second.

TRUMAN'S CABINET LUNCH—President Truman held an important lunch with his Cabinet last week at which he expressed very frank fears about the current situation — especially what Korea might do to the American economy. He was particularly worried about inflation and expressed the hope that no panic-buying or hoarding of scarce materials should take place among industry or consumers. Truman has ordered the National Security Resources Board to go all out in planning what must be done immediately if it looks like Korea would develop into a world war.

BRITAIN WAKES UP—Up to last weekend the British Foreign Office was putting heavy pressure on France and Egypt to agree to seat the Chinese Communists in the United Nations. Bevin thought this would bring Moscow back into the U. N. and help compose the world's differences. However, the British Foreign Office is now expected to abandon its misplaced efforts, and withdraw recognition from Red China altogether.

BOGGED DOWN IN CHINA—Some of America's top diplomats are secretly fearful that the real motive behind the Communist attack on Korea is Moscow's hope to involve the United States in a military campaign against the Chinese Communsts. . . . Moscow is reported to believe that a war between the United States and China would last for generations, would sap America's strength to the point where we could not resist Russian advances in other parts of the world . . . This was one reason Chiang Kai-shek's offer to send troops to South Korea was promptly vetoed.

NO MORE DETROITS—By the end of this year, the Government will start a limited dispersal of industry. Within a few months, the locaton of every new factory will be determined by the Federal Government in an attempt to relieve the dangerous overconcentration of America's industrial might in such cities as Detroit and Pittsburgh. In other words, population under the 1960 census will not depend on such factors as markets, labor supply and raw materials; but on the atom bomb.

Weather Balloon Found in Montana Came From N. M.

Minneapolis, July 5 (AP).—A General Mills, Inc., official said today a balloon found near Dillon, Mont., yesterday was manufactured by the company and released at White Sands, N. Mex., proving grounds for weather research.

C. B. Moore, jr., project engineer for General Mills laboratory, said the balloon was sent up at 6 a. m. Thursday with an experimental device to record temperature, pressure and humidity data in the upper atmosphere. The device was released from the balloon over the proving grounds and recovered.

An alarm clock and battery found with the plastic balloon was used to release the weather instrument, after the balloon had been in flight for a given length of time.

NEA to Meet Only In Cities Having No Segregation

St. Louis, July 5 (U.P.).—The National Education Association voted today to hold its future conventions in cities where racial segregation does not exist.

The NEA convention here adopted by voice vote an amendment to its by-laws setting forth that conventions would be held only in cities "where it is possible to make provisions without discrimination for the housing, feeding, seating at the meeting and general welfare of all members."

The resolution would prohibit the association from holding any future national meetings in St. Louis, which was called a "Jim Crow city" at last year's convention.

About 4100 delegates and members of affiliated educational organizations are attending the five-day meeting here at Kiel Auditorium. Negro delegates have been fed and housed separately.
